I'd like to go in Kyoto or Tokyo, Japan.

In Tokyo, I would like to visit temples and to know translations . The flowers are so colourful and also , I would like to go to see the big mountain . In Tokyo, I want to meet the people because their personality are very special , I find there is a positive energy and i'd like to see the food , the building and the shop . This two cities are very different about the culture but they are really interesting . Kyoto is more natural than Tokyo , it's smaller so it's more calm. The city of Tokyo is looks like a mini game . I hope to go in this two destinations and maybe a day.

The purpose of this report is to outline the famous destinations where French people like to travel. Firstly,I will talk about the places they go to and why and when they travel there and then how the future innovations might influence French travelling.

Even though travelling is an activity that is influenced by culture, French usually like to stay close to their home and they travel during their holidays especially during summer time. Therefore, they often stay in France or in Europe. Depending on the season they either go to the Alpes to ski or in the south of France during the summer to relax near the beach.

Those two destinations are mostly chosen for their accessibility as you do not have to take the plane and cheap ways of travelling exist to go there such as buses. Furthermore, French like to stay in their country because without going too far away you can admire beautiful landscapes with varied weathers. Everyone can find a destination he likes in France.

This trend might change in the next few years with the development of faster and safer means of transport. Moreover, if travel becomes cheaper, not only the French but the whole world will travel more to destinations which are further away in order to enrich their culture.

To sum up, my report states that French like to stay inside their country while travelling because it is a cheap way to enjoy your holiday. However that attitude will probably change with new technologies.

Faithfully,

Marie
