Women's rights are front and center in the news in 2017. But in the City of Brotherly Love, we've always known that the future is female. The six professionals featured in our annual Women of Influence edition have paved their own paths to power with a shared mission in mind: Give back on the road to the top. Here, from inside the historic Ritz-Carlton, Philadelphia, we present Philly's most of-the-moment female leaders.

—TEEN SPIRIT—

Author, stylist, and personal-growth consultant Cheryl Ann Wadlington shares her inspiration for Evoluer House.

First job: "I was a cashier at KFC."

On my nightstand: "The Bible."

What empowerment means: "A process through which people envision and create what they really want in life and in their community."

Greatest accomplishment: "Helping disadvantaged girls of color in Philly from ages 13 to 18 become college-bound and career-ready through Evoluer House. This breaks the cycle of high intergenerational poverty in Philly. These girls are often overlooked and frowned upon by society. They are suspended from school at disproportionate rates and become more susceptible to falling behind."

Role models: "My late parents and brother remain my inspiration. They instilled in me the belief that I don't have to be like everybody else—to be myself—which has served as my foundation. This helped launch my career in fashion as a journalist and image consultant and instilled in me values that charted my life and defined success for me. They also underscored my responsibility to help others."

From Pennsylvania to Pennsylvania Avenue: "I was one of 10 women in the nation selected as a Champion of Change and invited to speak at the White House. It was a magical moment. It also allowed me to shine a global spotlight on the obstacles girls of color face in school and why our work is more vital than ever."

Advice to young women: "If people are doubting how far you can go, go so far that you can't hear them anymore."

What's next: "Workshops on STEM and the scholarship process. My book The Diva Girl's Guide to Style and Self-Respect will be re-released."

Me in three words: "Resilient. Humble. Leader."
