MOCKING GOD forced on America by Anarchists in Power Must be Rejected by God's People. Prayer Warriors Needed to go to CA with Faye to sow the Word of God to youth. American citizens are being hood-winked, especially true Believers and patriots. Our mission to CA is taking root. Sponsors of the Founders Bible to be given to students at the UC-Berkeley are coming forth, PTL. We are now asking for sponsors of Founders Bibles to be given to students at Stamford and regular Bibles to be given to the homeless.

God sent His Word and healed them.

California is truly Hell's Gates. This is where Jesus took his disciples to declare his deity. I have been there many times. Over a year ago, God spoke to me to take his army to CA and break the forces of evil over college and universities. Boy, I have been attacked unmercifully during this time. However, the Lord has healed me from congestive heart failure. I am alive and well. Thank you for your prayers, faith and support during this time. We never gave in or gave up. Look at what we are up against. WE MUST FIGHT BACK!

Calif. Assembly Approves Resolution That Calls for Church Acceptance of LGBTQ

Tuesday, 02 July

Written by Joe Wolverton, II, J.D.
The California State Assembly voted 9-2 to send to the state senate a resolution calling on "religious leaders to counsel on LGBTQ matters from a place of love, compassion, and knowledge of the psychological and other harms of conversion therapy."

While no one would argue with the aim of being more loving and more compassionate in our counsel of our fellow man, the people's representatives do not possess any authority in the arena of religious practice.

Article I, Section 4 of the California Constitution reads, in relevant part: "Free exercise and enjoyment of religion without discrimination or preference are guaranteed. This liberty of conscience does not excuse acts that are licentious or inconsistent with the peace or safety of the State. The Legislature shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion." Regardless of those restrictions, lawmakers in the California Assembly have chosen to ignore their state's constitution and to introduce a measure that, should it ever become binding law, would drastically shrink the scope of religious liberty in the Golden State. Assembly Concurrent Resolution (ACR) 99 authored by Assemblyman Evan Low seems to sidestep the state constitution's guarantee of "free exercise and enjoyment of religion." Perhaps legislators in California would rather lose religious liberty than lose the votes of the so-called LGBTQ community.

Facts and fidelity to constitutional oaths (don't forget that state legislators are required by Article VI of the U.S. Constitution to support that document) are so far from the fantasy world inhabited by these lawmakers, that the text of ACR 99 all but places blame on religious groups for suicide rates among those people identified as LGBTQ. The resolution declares:

"The stigma associated with being LGBTQ often created by groups in society, including therapists and religious groups, has caused disproportionately high rates of suicide, attempted suicide, depression, rejection, and isolation amongst LGBTQ and questioning individuals." That's right.

Representatives in California point to the pulpit and the pastors that preach from them as the causes of depression and suicide among those tortured souls who feel compelled — for one reason or another — to fight against the genetic verities of their gender.

In the next paragraph of the resolution, the madness marches on: "In a pluralistic society, people differing along spectrums of political and religious perspectives share a common responsibility of protecting the health and well-being of all children and vulnerable communities."

Here's a question: Wouldn't a pluralistic society by definition disagree on what their respective responsibilities would be toward "vulnerable communities?" In fact, wouldn't the many members of such a society likely disagree as to what would qualify as "vulnerable?"

The answer to anyone committed to reason would be "Yes." But to those who believe themselves on the cusp of controlling churches and outlawing disagreement with the decadent, there is no commitment to reason, there is only a rush to regulate religion — religion that doesn't meet their multicultural muster — out of existence, at least on the Left Coast.

The faithful, thankfully, are not sitting idly by while their most basic liberties are under barrage by the irreligious and irrational members of the state assembly. "Everyone deserves respect in this discussion and dialogue about what kind of counseling should be allowed in California. But to join in a document...that really slanders the church and slanders good counselors and good patients. It's unexplainable and it's really inexcusable," said Roger Gannam, vice president of legal affairs for Liberty Counsel, as reported by CBN News.

"We have a track record," said Gannam.

"We have actual patients and clients who have benefitted from therapy to help them with their unwanted attractions. We've helped them change their lives. We've helped them to live heterosexual lifestyles with strong and healthy marriages and so it's really a slander against them to say that this practice is somehow unethical and harmful." As to the harm or help brought about by so-called conversion therapy, that is a matter for those more educated in those matters than I.

What I can say with certainty, however, is that conversion therapy involving minors has been illegal in California since 2012! With that fact in mind, it doesn't take Sherlockian insight to see what is the real reason for this latest attack on Christianity. It's just that: an attack on Christianity. As Nicole Russell writes in the Washington Examiner, "Since conversion therapy is already banned, it's clear this resolution is meant to pave the way for penalizing religious communities in California, for standing up for what they believe in, a direct violation of their First Amendment rights." Russell's recognition of the state assembly's obvious animosity toward the church and those who believe in that institution's ability to assist them in living better lives is echoed by more than two dozen counsellors, Christian leaders, and laymen who report being brought happiness through adherence to the tenets taught at church.

The group wrote a letter condemning the resolution, which they insist denies Californians of their constitutionally protected freedom of conscience. The parties who penned the letter wrote: Religious freedom is an inalienable right recognized within the context of America's religious heritage; it rests upon the insight that human beings of every kind are endowed with equal worth because each and every one of us bears the glorious image of Nature's God. Every person in California, therefore, is entitled to the freedom to develop their own sense of identity whether traditionally unto God or not. Religious leaders have the Constitutionally protected right to teach religious doctrine in accordance with their faith, and politicians have no right to tell clergy what is moral, dictate the content of their sermons, or instruct them in religious counseling.

Were the 64 assemblymen currently signed on as cosponsors of ACR 99 genuinely interested in protecting a pluralistic society, wouldn't they logically avoid any effort — even nonbinding ones — to squelch opposing viewpoints? Logically, yes, but as the text of this resolution makes crystal clear, the authors and sponsors of this measure aren't given to behaving logically.

It should be restated that in its current form, the resolution has no legal teeth. Should the state senate follow the example of their colleagues in the state assembly and approve ACR 99, the measure could, after completion of certain parliamentary procedures, metastasize into a bill that could become law and change forever the fate of the faithful in California.

While this is unlikely to happen, it will be much less likely if men and women of faith in California communicate their opposition to this resolution and any additional — more legally binding — attempts to mandate the message preached, professed, and practiced by believers.

I'll give the last word, as I always try to do, to one of our Founding Fathers. In this case, it's counsel Thomas Jefferson included in his Bill for Establishing Religious Freedom written in 1779: "That to suffer the civil Magistrate to intrude his powers into the field of opinion, and to restrain the profession or propagation of principles on supposition of their ill tendency, is a dangerous fallacy, which at once destroys all religious liberty; because he being of course Judge of that tendency will make his own opinions the rule of judgment, and approve or condemn the sentiments of others only as they shall square with, or differ from his own."

Washington, pastor was arrested for obstruction and taken to jail for a few hours on Saturday after refusing to move across the street from the Spokane Public Library while trying to protest a “Drag Queen Story Hour” event held at the library. Pastor Afhsin Yaghtin of New Covenant Baptist Church was arrested after speaking with police officers, telling them the library is public property and that he should be able to protest next to the building rather than across the street, according to ChristianNews.net.

Video posted to social media showed officers telling the pastor he needs to stand on the other side of the street even though protesters defending the drag queens were allowed on the same side of the street as the library, according to the website. Yaghtin was arrested according to a Spokane Police report for “trying to enter the non-designated protest area.” He was released later on Saturday, according to a post on his Facebook page.

Several hundred supporters of the event were allowed beside the library building. But the 200 people who were protesting the event were told by police to stand on the other side of the street. Protesters held up signs and voiced their opposition to having men dressed as women reading books to children. According to The Spokesman-Review, there was a heavy police presence at the story hour event, with at least 40 officers surveying the crowds. The ChristianNews.net website also linked to photos of police spotters with binoculars placed on the library’s roof.

WHAT IS DRAG QUEEN STORY HOUR?

Drag Queen Story Hour (DQSH) is just what it sounds like—drag queens reading stories to children in libraries, schools, and bookstores.

DQSH captures the imagination and play of the gender fluidity of childhood and gives kids glamorous, positive, and unabashedly queer role models. In spaces like this, kids are able to see people who defy rigid gender restrictions and imagine a world where people can present as they wish, where dress up is real.

DRAG QUEEN STORY TIME GOES A STEP FURTHER

JULY 9, 2019 | FROM IFA STAFF

Oh Lord, it hurts to watch children be exposed to this evil. Wake up the church! Let us find our “salt” again and be the thermostat and not just the thermometer for our culture.

Caution: Adult content.

Libraries used to host a reading from a

Caldecott medal author or offer Storytime for tots, reading Curious George. Now, Storytime at many libraries is a drag show and grooming event. And sadly many librarians are enthusiastically inviting it and parents are too willing to bring their kids. But what began as story time read by a drag queen has now evolved into a dance by drag queens or transgenders, complete with adult-oriented dance moves and kids bringing them dollar bills, and other storytimes inviting kids to crawl on them as they lay on the ground. Yes, you heard that right. Not satisfied to just read to the kids, now they are physically touching the kids and inviting them to crawl on and lay on these strangers as they lie on the ground face up. What parent thinks it is okay for children to physically lay on men who they don’t know, and encourage them to be physical with strangers?

The lesson (if there is just one) is that what they say they want is really just the first step. First, they wanted legal rights to marry. They got it. Second, then they wanted people to accept it and condone it. They are suing for that now. Third, and now what we are seeing across the nation is they want children and youth to participate in it. They normalize it, endear it, and groom children to be accepting of it. Pedophiles absolutely know that. You'll find school curriculum, story hours with physical play with transgender and drag queens, camps with transgender counselors (oftentimes not disclosed to parents). What you see should not only sicken you, but ring the alarm. This needs prayer, yes—it IS a spiritual battle.

But it also needs action. Make a commitment to find out what is happening in your local library and schools. Don't be afraid to speak out about it—even if you are not a parent of school-age children. It is your taxpayer dollars that fund libraries, schools, municipal events and more. We can't expect that there is some designated group fighting for us—we are it. And it all needs bathed in prayer.

Will you join us in putting action to our prayer in this issue? Will you share this story with other praying friends and invite them to join you in praying and speaking out?

PRAYER POINTS

“Men shall not lie with a male as one lies with a female; it is an abomination” Father this is Your word and command to us. Forgive us, the church, for not standing up against this abomination and allowing the spirit of perversion to gain so much power over the people. Father,

Drag Queen STORY HOUR

I pray that You send Your fire down and destroy this spirit that is bewitching and confusing the people. Let them know this is not of You and it is not accepted in Your kingdom. Restore Your natural order of natural born male and female. Protect the children from this great evil. Protect their minds from being misled to the darkness.

I pray that You bring their parents into Your light. Give them a holy conviction that they too will turn from this great evil and teach their children in Your truth and Your laws. I pray that You send a move across the land and do away with the the homosexuality and gender confusion

. Send Your Holy Spirit with fire and force to bring order back to this wicked and rebellious world. Father we thank You that You are righteous and just. We thank You for bringing Your correction to the people of this world. Father thank You for loving us so much although we are undeserving. Fight this battle for us and destroy this enemy. (Photo: Reuters/Mike Segar/Newscom) PHILADELPHIA—Despite being proud of advances they’ve made during eight years under President Barack Obama, leaders of the lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender movement say they still have work to do. “The future of the LGBT movement hinges largely on the outcome of this election,” Kevin Jennings, executive director of the Arcus Foundation, said at a global LGBT summit held in Philadelphia during the Democratic National Convention.

The liberal Left continue to push their radical agenda against American values. The good news is there is a solution. LGBT advocacy groups also are involved in an array of lawsuits they believe could have a major impact, including a Pennsylvania case where a transgender women alleges discrimination by her former employer. Speakers acknowledged the problem, and admitted a double standard. “If we’re going to talk about millennials and people of color, it’s important to talk with them and not to them,” the Arcus Foundation’s Jennings said. The two dozen or so moderators and panelists included women, African-Americans, and Asian-Americans, but most appeared to be white, middle-aged men. The ultimate goal, leaders said throughout the week, is to make life easier for the next generation of LGBT youth by passing laws and implementing policies they argue would make the world a more tolerant place.

Wu, executive director at GLAD, said: We have got to do so much more around ensuring that LGBT children and young people are fully included, integrated, and celebrated in every aspect of life—in their families, and schools, and communities, and faith communities. If we really do that, then we can break the cycle of harm that has caused so many of us to have a lot of trauma and problems as adults. Here’s a breakdown of four of the LGBT movement’s specific strategies, as described at the Equality Forum.

1. Passing the Equality Act

Passing this federal legislation is perhaps the most important short-term goal. Wolfson, the former president of Freedom to Marry, called it “unfinished business.” The Equality Act, sponsored by Sen. Jeff Merkley, D-Ore., and Rep. David Cicilline, D-R.I., would amend the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to include sexual orientation and gender identity among prohibited categories of discrimination. According to one of the most influential LGBT advocacy groups, the Human Rights Campaign, the >>> Read More: How the So-Called ‘Equality Act’ Threatens Religious Liberty

According to the Human Rights Campaign, more than 80 corporations have signed on in support of the measure, including Target, Facebook, American Airlines, and Apple. (See chart below.) Esseks, of the American Civil Liberties Union, said that support was largely a result of the relationships the LGBT movement built with private businesses while working to legalize same-sex marriage. Big business is helping carry the water for the policy goals of Human Rights Campaign and other LGBT advocacy organizations that are leading a dangerous assault on religious liberty on multiple fronts. The alliance between the Human Rights Campaign and its corporate sponsors like Target and Bank of America is a principle driver of the LGBT political movement.

2. Defeating State and Local Laws

The biggest threat LGBT leaders said they’re facing is what they call “anti-LGBT” legislation proposed by conservatives in state and local governments. “Religion is not the reason people are bigots,” he said. “It’s the excuse.”

3. Going to Court

Panelists said they have their eyes on an array of court cases that they believe could greatly affect the future of the LGBT movement’s agenda, While LGBT leaders are eyeing other legal cases—many of them involving transgender Americans—some experts said they aren’t overly concerned with cases in which private business owners, citing religious beliefs, decline to provide wedding-related services. These include bakers, photographers, and florists.

“We’re doing very well in those cases,” Esseks said. “We’ve won almost all of them.”

And if one were to land before the Supreme Court? Esseks said:

Justice [Anthony] Kennedy says people are free to believe whatever they want to believe [and] that gives me significant hope the court will say that’s not what religious freedom looks like, what you’re asking for is a license to discriminate, and that’s not something we’ll constitutionalize.

4. Partnering With Black Lives Matter and Others

The LGBT leaders also said they are beginning to discuss how they can be more supportive of other minority rights groups, specifically Black Lives Matter. Drawing a parallel to Democrat nominee Hillary Clinton’s declaration in 2011 that “gay rights are human rights,” Jennings, the executive director of the Arcus Foundation, said that “the rights of black people are gay rights, and the rights of gay people are black rights.”

‘Make Your Dream Happen’

The overall message to youth who struggle to accept their identity: Dream big. “Believe in your dream and make your dream happen,” Jennings said. Shannon Minter, litigation director for the National Center for Lesbian Rights, told an audience of about 30 not to stop at tolerance and acceptance. “We have got to do so much more around ensuring that LGBT children and young people are fully included, integrated, and celebrated in every aspect of life—in their families and schools and communities and faith communities,” Minter said. “If we really do that, then we can break the cycle of harm that has caused so many of us to have a lot of trauma and problems as adults.”

GLAD’s Wu said:

Let’s dream bigger for a second and let’s think about students—all students, not just LGBT students—learning about LGBT history and contributions to the literature, and then let’s even dream bigger than that and let’s think about inclusive health and sex education and think about the impact that would have, particularly with regards to the HIV epidemic ... There’s so much more that we can imagine if we’re able to imagine it and we work hard at it. The biggest threat LGBT leaders said they’re facing is what they call “anti-LGBT” legislation proposed by conservatives in state and local governments. After the U.S. Supreme Court ruled on same-sex marriage, many people of faith concluded they needed laws to protect their conscience rights so that they can run businesses, adoption agencies, and charity organizations in accord with their deeply held religious beliefs.

Specifically, these state laws aim to protect religious freedom by ensuring that state government can’t discriminate against private schools, charities, businesses, or individuals for their beliefs. Examples include believing that marriage is the union of one man and one woman, that sexual relations should be reserved for marriage, and that gender identity is based on biological sex. Wolfson, who spent decades advocating same-sex marriage, didn’t pay much mind to those concerns.
