1 Introduction

The United States is embroiled in a Presidential election like no other.

Unlike other Presidential campaigns, this one has become very controversial because it has been very unconventional. It is a race between an establishment figure and a reality television star. And they are both the most unpopular Presidential candidates in history.

On Tuesday 8 November 2016, the United States of America (U.S.A. or U.S.) will go to the polls to elect the 45th President and the 48th Vice President in what has become the most controversial Presidential campaign in history. It has been unconventional, uncontrollable and at times, unimaginable.

The Democratic Party have nominated Hillary Rodham Clinton, a 69-year-old former First Lady to President Bill Clinton. She has one daughter and has a net-worth of $45 million.

The Republican Party have nominated Donald John Trump, a 70-year-old businessman, television personality, and now politician. He has been married three times, has five children, and he has a net-worth of $3.7 billion.

Hillary Clinton managed to see off the populist left-wing Senator from Vermont Bernard Sanders, whilst Donald Trump beat 11 Republican candidates including favourite Jeb Bush who is the son and brother of former Presidents George H. W. Bush and George W. Bush respectively.

Since 2015, when both Clinton and Trump announced their candidacy, the campaign became fuelled with controversy. There have been allegations of racism, sexism, misogyny, treason, and the never-ending email scandal. The election has been difficult for the U.S. It has been very toxic and disrespectful in every sense imaginable.

It is broadly acknowledged both by Republicans and the Democrats that Clinton is the most qualified Presidential candidate in history and conventional thinking might tell you that she should win by a landslide against a candidate with no public office experience, very little knowledge on policy issues and who has just about offended everybody, even those in his own party.

But this is a Presidential race like no other. The race has become so toxic and negative that neither candidates are talking about policy anymore, but rather about each other. At every rally, Trump attacks Clinton and Clinton attacks Trump.

The American people seem to be divided and undecided, as both candidates are embroiled in controversy. And the funny thing is that everyone is praising President Obama – even Republican Senators!

In this commentary, I am going to focus on the 8 issues that I believe are important to both candidates, providing a brief synopsis on what they believe. I will also provide brief analysis on the campaign and share some perspectives.

All right?" <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Does not support TPP nor the TTIP with the European Union</li> <li>• Does not support NAFTA</li> <li>• Unclear whether he supports the idea of 'free trade'</li> <li>• Does not support increasing tariffs on U.S.' trade partners</li> </ul>

<sup>4</sup> North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) is an agreement signed by Canada, Mexico, and the United States, creating a trilateral trade bloc in North America. The agreement came into force on 1 January 1994

Populism is a worldwide phenomenon

Given that Donald Trump has not held a public office and tends to offend people, many have wondered why he has such support from Republican Party membership.

The answer probably lies in the fact that there has been a populist surge throughout the western world whereby the people have been frustrated against established politicians and have turned to figures who appear to represent their concerns.

Populism does not have any boundaries and appeals to people across the political spectrum – left-wing and right-wing. Trump is like any populist politician in the world. They have an appeal because they are against the political status quo, political class and the establishment.

Now, let's take a few other populist figures and outline the similarities. These include Bernard 'Bernie' Sanders, Democrats (U.S.), Nigel Farage, UKIP (U.K.), Jeremy Corbyn, Labour (U.K.), Marine Le Pen, National Front (France), and Alexis Tsipras, Synaspismos (Greece).

Populist demagogues have similar characteristics regardless of ideology:

The Appeal of Populist Politicians	Politicians
Why do people support them?	Trump Sanders Farage Corbyn Le Pen Tsipras
- Considered an 'outsider' and unconventional - Anti-establishment - 'Principled' and say what he/she thinks - Some are not a 'career politicians' - Become the 'voice' of the 'people'
Where is their electoral base?	Trump Sanders Farage Corbyn Le Pen Tsipras
- Disfranchised working-class people  Despite being a billionaire, Trump has an appeal amongst the white working class

They are popular amongst Party membership - They tend to have the mandate of the membership - They easily attract thousands of people to their political rally	Trump Sanders Farage Corbyn Le Pen Tsipras
They are divisive amongst public - They don't have the mass appeal with the general electorate	Trump Sanders Farage Corbyn Le Pen
Little support from their Party's establishment - Elected Party officials tend not to like them	Trump Sanders Corbyn
Some Republican Senators have withdrawn support for Trump. Other Republicans including Colin Powell and George W. Bush have 'endorsed' Clinton
Blame it on the media - They tend to blame the media if they get scrutinised e.g. Right-wingers call the media 'liberal' and Left-wingers call the media 'Conservative'	Trump Sanders Farage Corbyn Le Pen Tsipras
Passionate but abusive supporters - Supporters tend to abuse people who disagree with them on social media with foul language and tone, make rape and death-threats against women and hurl anti-Semitic & Islamophobic abuse	Trump Sanders Farage Corbyn Le Pen Tsipras
Share similar policy ideas - Anti-austerity - Anti-globalisation - Against the European Union - Against NATO	Trump Sanders Farage Corbyn Le Pen Tsipras
Where is their electoral base? - Disfranchised working-class people  Despite being a billionaire, Trump has an appeal amongst the white working class	Trump Sanders Farage Corbyn Le Pen Tsipras

Populist demagogues can galvanise people under populist themes and conjure up conspiracy theories against the establishment and the government of the day.

Although Trump has similar appeal to that of other populist demagogues, he has gone about it in a very different way. He has not fought on policies and issues but rather on personality. He has made offensive remarks about his Republican rivals during the primaries particularly Ted Cruz and his wife, and anyone else who has scrutinised or criticised him.

Publicity is not always good publicity

Unlike other Presidential campaigns, if the candidate is in the news, it is usually not a good sign.

Candidates usually seek as much publicity as possible but in this very unconventional election campaign, the candidate who receives publicity is usually the one who is under negative scrutiny.

Donald Trump has come under fire for making racist, sexist, misogynist comments throughout the campaign, whilst Hillary Clinton has been criticised for using her private email server.

If the news story is not about Trump's character, it is a bad sign for Clinton, whilst news stories about her emails tend to drum up her base.

Racism didn't matter but sexism does

Before the Presidential campaign, Donald Trump had launched what many have called a bizarre racist campaign to question whether President Obama was born in the U.S. He was proved to be wrong but he kept on the narrative. And even though recently he accepted Obama was born in the U.S., many of his supporters still believe the President is foreign born and is a 'Muslim'.

The President has not been the only one to have come under fire from Trump. Trump has lambasted America's southern neighbour, Mexico. He said that Mexicans are drug-traffickers and rapists. The remarks led several businesses to cut their ties with him but then he followed that up by saying that as President he would build a wall that Mexico would pay for.

Trump also insulted the 'Gold-Star' Muslim mother of a war hero after she and her husband made an appearance at the National Democratic Convention (DNC). But none of these remarks and many others towards anyone he does not like had deterred his supporters from deserting him until recently when the Access Hollywood tapes surfaced showing that he made improper and lewd comments about sexually assaulting women.

That was the last straw for quite a few Republican Senators including House Leader Paul Ryan and many women, who make up over half of the electorate.

The New York Times has summed up everyone Trump has insulted, which makes very interesting reading.<sup>5</sup>

No Tax Returns

Questions about taxes have dogged Donald Trump's run for President for a long time. Unlike Hillary Clinton who has released 40 years of Tax Returns, Trump has not released any.

In an investigation conducted by The New York Times, attention has repeatedly focused on the large loss Trump reported on his 1995 state Tax Returns and whether he had paid his fair share of income taxes. Much of the leaked documents has concerned whether Trump was able to use the net operating loss deduction to avoid paying federal income tax for nearly two decades. There are also speculations that Trump benefited from tax loopholes for the real estate industry and even engaged in questionable tax planning.

In the second television debate Trump responded to Clinton saying that it was smart to avoid paying tax. Although it caused an uproar in some quarters, it was justified by his supporters and surrogates alike.

To resolve the questions around his personal tax history and therefore his fitness for office, Trump should release his federal Tax Returns so that the American people can judge for themselves whether he deserves to be trusted with the task of executing tax laws.

The Hillary Emails

The charge that Hillary Clinton used a private email server during her time as the Secretary of State at times feels like a red herring because she was not the first to do so – President George W. Bush and Secretary of State Colin Powell had one too. But because the Clintons have been secretive in many areas, there is a suspicion that she might have violated security by doing so.

FBI Director James Comey already exonerated Clinton but reopening the case to investigate 650,000 emails of former senator Anthony Weiner, does dent Clinton's appeal to voters.

However, it also raises questions as to why Comey, a registered Republican who was hired by President Obama as FBI Director, decided to reopen the case so close to election day.

<http://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2016/01/28/upshot/donald-trump-twitter-insults.html>

The new case is so vague that no one knows if Clinton has actually done anything wrong. The emails are about her colleagues and the FBI not providing any information only fuels the narrative of wrongdoing and a boost to Trump.

Under the Hatch Act<sup>6</sup>, government officials are not allowed to influence a Presidential campaign and there are concerns by both Democrats and Republicans that Comey has violated the Act.

The investigation will not be completed before polling day and therefore it has already influenced which way people will vote, as Clinton's poll numbers have dropped.

If Clinton wins, she will be the only President in history to have an investigation hanging over her. And what if she is exonerated, does Comey apologise and everything is simply forgiven? But what if she is guilty? Or what if Trump wins? Interesting times ahead.

Although the FBI might have a legitimate case to reopen the Clinton emails, they have withheld evidence of Russian support for Trump and his tax affairs for fear of influencing the election. Hypocrisy some might say.

The Clinton Foundation

There is a charge against Hillary Clinton that when someone made a significant donation to the Clinton Foundation, they appeared to have access to her when she was Secretary of State. Clinton has denied this but email leaks show that some people did have direct access.

Bill Clinton has said that the Clinton Foundation will be closed if Hillary becomes President or at least they will not have any involvement in it.

Donald Trump on the other hand has been accused to using monies raised by the Trump Foundation to pay off his debts. The charge has not stuck as there has been many other scandals.

The Michelle Affect

President Obama has high approval rating right now but the First Lady has even higher. Donald Trump has criticised everyone who has criticised him except for Michelle Obama.

That is mainly because Michelle Obama is hugely popular amongst the Republicans as well as the Democrats. She has kept herself away from politics but as her speeches have shown, she can be very political, very inspirational and very appealing.

The Bernie Affect

Even though Bernie Sanders led a left-wing populist movement against the established Hillary Clinton, once he lost he became disciplined and supported candidate the Democratic Party nominated. Sanders has an appeal that Clinton cannot reach and so he will bring quite a lot of votes Clinton's way.

New voters

A lot of Hispanics registered to vote and some have already voted. Many of those have not indicated whether they are Democrats or Republican and so it would be interesting to see what the outcome is.

3 Final Thoughts

The 2016 Presidential campaign has been the most unusual in history. It has not been fought on policy but on personality.

Even though I have outlined both Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump's policies, it is very difficult to critique them because there has been very little spoken about them on the campaign trail.

Both candidates replying on others to help them
Unlike any other candidate before, both candidates are relying on other people to help them win.

Hillary Clinton has the support of President Obama, Vice-President Joe Biden and former President Bill Clinton, celebrities including Katy Perry, Jennifer Lopez, Beyoncé and Jay Z. And she has the support of Michelle Obama, who appears to be her greatest asset.

Donald Trump on the other hand has the support of the former New York Mayor, Rudy Giuliani, the Governor of New Jersey Chris Christie and his family who are incredibly talented and capable.

Trump is not fit to be President
From the day Donald Trump announced his candidacy he has continuously demonstrated that he lacks the knowledge, temperament, steadiness, experience and honesty that is usually a prerequisite skill to become President of the U.S.

The Establishment versus Reality TV Star: Hillary Clinton versus Donald Trump

Trump is erratic, ill-tempered and ill-equipped to be Commander-in-chief. Furthermore. He has been caught literally lying, he fuels prejudice and speaks recklessly.

But just like other populist demagogues around the world, he does have the courage to speak his mind. He also has a credible running-mate in Mike Pence. But it is Trump that the electorate will be voting for not Mike Pence.

Baffled why Hillary Clinton is polarising

Hillary Clinton is the establishment figure with over 30 years of public service, but she represents the status quo in Washington. She was careless in handling classified information that potentially threatened national security. She is also accused doing very little when holding public office.

But she is the most qualified candidate in history and is recognised throughout the world. She has the temperament, personality, knowledge of issues and experience to be Commander-in-chief.

In the scheme of things, does having a personal server or being a spouse of a cheating former President really matter? She will essentially be carrying on President Obama's policies.

Is this the end for the Republican party?

Donald Trump is different from any Republican candidate. Some Republicans will argue that he is not even a Republican, as he was previously a Democrat and then an Independent.

After Mitt Romney's loss in 2012, the Republicans said they will go through a post-mortem and will appeal to voters they had not previously such as Hispanic, African-American and Asian.

Nominating Donald Trump wasn't what they had in mind. They will need to consider how they select Presidential candidates and conduct proper due diligence going forward.

The aftermath

Donald Trump has changed American politics forever. Regardless of whether he wins or loses, like other populist demagogues, he has created a movement who will be very vocal in the future.

America has a choice

On Tuesday 8 November, America has a choice to elect a flawed established figure or elect an even more flawed former reality TV star.

At the time of writing, CNN Poll of Polls show a 47% for Hillary Clinton and 42% for Donald Trump. This could be once-in-a-generation moment to shape the future of the U.S. so please exercise your right to vote. However, don't complain if you disagree with the outcome.
