

You may have a tax issue and not know it...

File Your Return to Claim the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC)

The EITC is a credit for working individuals and families. The credit can be worth over $6,000, and it is claimed on your income tax return.

Non-Filers

The IRS may file a return if you fail to do so, and the taxes are often higher than if you filed yourself.

Collections

The IRS has 10 years to collect a tax debt (with some exceptions). After 10 years, the debt will go away automatically.

Identity Thieves Can Take Your Refund

If someone has your personal information such as your Social Security number, they could use this to file a return and claim a refund. If you think this has happened, you should call the Clinic.

After a Divorce, Who Gets to Claim the Children?

A parent may incorrectly claim a child as a dependent after a divorce or separation. When this happens, you should contact the Clinic for help.

Tax Issues in Domestic Violence

If you leave your abuser and have tax debts due to filing a joint return, you may be able to eliminate the debt by requesting Innocent Spouse Relief.

When a Lender Cancels Some or All of a Debt you Owe

If a lender forgives all or some of your debt, it will be considered taxable income, unless an exception applies.

Tax Implications of Settlements In or Out of Court

Settlement money you receive is likely taxable income and must be reported on your tax return. You should consider this before settling.

What can you do?

- File on time.
- Use a trusted return preparer if you cannot file yourself.
- Pay as much as you can by the filing deadline.
- If you still owe, contact the IRS to work things out. The IRS will work with you based on your current finances.
- Doing nothing makes matters worse!

Keep Good Records

You should keep these documents in case you get audited:

- Tax returns (at least the past 3 years)
- Bank statements, bills, and loan documents
- Business records (income and expenses)
- School records, medical records, applications for public benefits
- Anything else that supports any item on your tax return

Deadlines Are Important

If you get a letter from the IRS, respond quickly. Ignoring letters may result in increased taxes, penalties, and interest.
