A 21st century education CREDO
Thou shall not be taught in classrooms anymore, but by the reality around you.
Thou shall not create short-term remembering, but solid capacity integrated in your lasting mental world.
Thou shall not work with artificial cases, but with real-life challenges
Thou shall not “learn” when scheduled, but when you need it and can use it in practice
Thou shall not ask what is the meaning of the “learning”, but embrace important missions in society
Thou shall not be driven by abstract reasoning, but by your personal interests, talents and aspirations
Thou shall not be scaffolding abstract knowledge, but empowering your agency.
Thou shall not be imprisoned by “school”, but take action in the physical, social and virtual worlds.
Thou shall not be bored by old subjects, but allowed to immerse deeply in long-term missions.
Thou shall not simply learn “because”..., but through creating something useful for yourself and your communities.
Thou shall not anymore be half asleep in the classroom, but work hard to empower yourself for change and innovation.
Thou shall not simply “survive-learn”, but strive to create real outcomes and results
Thou shall no longer learn for yourself, but for your team and for your communities.
Thou shall not be taught by a teacher, but guided by teachers and community professionals as critical friends.
Thou shall not use technology because it is fashion, but because it helps you accomplish your missions.
Thou shall not limit yourself to mainstream technology, but master and form technology to support your projects.
Thou shall not any longer look at the real world through books, but build agency to impact and change it.
Thou shall not be considered too young to act in the real world, but a person full of initiative, ideas and resources.
Thou shall not be stressed by external demands, but build self-confidence through what your team accomplishes.
... then you will be ready to learn, act and live in the 21st century...
