FRIDAY EVENING CONVOCATION
BANQUET—JUNE 25, HAMLINE UNIVERSITY

Holiness and Splendid Ignorance: John Wesley and Education” has been selected by Dr. Richard P. Heitzenrater for his address at the Convocation Banquet. In 1993, he became William Kellogg Quick Prof. of Church History and Wesley Studies at the Divinity School, Duke University. For 16 years he was Albert C. Outler Prof. of Wesley Studies at Perkins School of Theology at SMU. Perhaps best known for “breaking the code” of Wesley’s diaries, Heitzenrater has written extensively and serves as the general editor of the 35-volume Bicentennial Edition of The Works of John Wesley.

At the banquet, the Distinguished Service Award of the General Commission will be presented. Retiring General Commission members will be honored and the Historical Society will present its awards.

The Vision, a play about Wesley and the founding of Kingswood School, will be presented in the Anne Simley Theatre at Hamline University following dinner. The play was written by R. Rex Stephenson and Mike Trochim, professors at Ferrum College in Virginia. Copies of the drama will be distributed courtesy of the General Board of Higher Ed and Ministry.

To complete the evening, the United Methodist Historical Society of Minnesota will host a reception for Dr. Heitzenrater and the other persons honored. See inside for more details and convocation registration form.

RENEWAL REMINDER

Please look at the address label on this newsletter. Above your name you will find the expiration date of your membership. If you see the date January 1999, or any earlier date, the time to renew your membership is now.

Our treasurer, would appreciate an early response. Send your checks to Lyle Johnston, 733 S. 3rd Street, Williams, AZ 86046-2461. It is a great help when you renew on time. It saves time and money for volunteer officers.

That Reminds Me...

Robert Drew Simpson

It may be a first in the history of our nation that there was a time when only lemonade was served in the White House. Such was the case when Rutherford B. Hayes was President. But it wasn’t particularly his doing. It was Lucy Ware Webb Hayes (1831–1889), his wife, who made the rules. She was not only a Methodist, but also a dedicated member of the temperance movement. I’m sure it was her dogged vigilance that earned her the nickname, “Lemonade Lucy”. If there were any attempts to spike the lemonade, history shows no record.

Lucy Webb Ware Rutherford became a Methodist while attending the Cincinnati Wesley Female College, later part of Ohio Wesleyan University. She became the first college education “first Lady” in our history. At age 30 she married Rutherford B. Hayes. They had 8 children. Four sons and one daughter grew to adult-hood.

Hayes at the outbreak of the Civil War left this law practice, and became a major general in the Union Army. When he was wounded, Lucy gathered her children and took up a hospital post where she could nurse her husband as well as others among the wounded. This was the strongly determined woman who was to declare as first Lady, “No alcohol in the White House.”

The Hayes family under Lucy’s hand was committed to serious religious practice. It is alleged that beyond their regular worship at the Foundry Methodist Episcopal Church devotion in the White House included kneeling in prayer at each day’s beginning and hymn singing each evening.

But Lucy Hayes reached out beyond her family. When the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church established the Woman’s Home Missionary Society, Lucy Hayes was elected its first President. For many years she provided strong, effective leadership. Recently I found the report of the first meeting of the Society from October 29-30, 1884. Mrs. Hayes was in the chair and as the report states: “She delivered the opening address in a distinct and impressive manner, her rich voice filling the large audience-room.”

But what Lucy Hayes said in her remarks set the tone, direction, and mission of this historic Society for the years to come as well as for the church.

“Our field of usefulness is of great extent. Our home population embraces elements, more or less extensive, of every important race, nationality and language. They are of all conditions, material, intellectual and moral.

Coming originally from every part of the world, they are here seated in the midst of this central continent. By the agencies of our advancing civilization, in the near future these people will surely wield a commanding influence in the affairs, in the education, and in the religion of all mankind.

The inspiring and attractive field which invites our efforts is the home. First in importance are the homes of the uninformed, destitute and unfortunate of our own race. To these we must add the lately emancipated people and their posterity, of the Indians, of the Mormons, of the Spanish Americans, and of the Chinese.

IDEAS FOR DISPLAYS

You can use photos, documents, and other objects that have become important in your church’s history to tell a story. Sometimes, a display project will bring a story together that had been spread around in various attics and basements. As the items are assembled, a personal history emerges. These ideas were gleaned from Desert SW Conference Historical Society’s newsletter. They borrowed them courtesy of Celebrating Our United Methodist Heritage, a publication of the General Commission, available from them.

- Show what church members were reading at a specific period (i.e., your church’s founding.)
- Create a Hall of Fame or a Memory Walk.
- Profile current or previous members in full-time church service
- Create a timeline that combines personal events from church records with major events in church and local secular history.
- Display “mystery” photos from the archives, asking church members to help identify the people and events.

SIMPSON PUBLISHES STORIES

Frederick E. Maser and Robert Drew Simpson have collaborated on a recently published book, If Saddlebags Could Talk: Methodist Stories and Anecdotes. “If the future belongs to the storytellers, then Frederick Maser and Robert Simpson are in the driver’s seat” writes Leonard Sweet, Dean at Drew Theological Seminary.

The book is available through Ingram Distr., from Providence House—the publisher—or online at Amazon.com or Barnesandnoble.com. ISBN1-57736-121-0 – Cost $11.95 softcover.
Encapsulating Documents

By Mark Shenise [excerpted from GCAH Archival Leaflet Series]

Encapsulation is a process that allows a fragile document to be sealed between two sheets of polyester film for protective viewing and ease of handling. This process does not slow down the rate of deterioration of a document—without proper preparation of the document before it is encapsulated the rate of deterioration is actually faster than if stored under standard archival conditions.

Rare and fragile documents that have an intrinsic historical value are good candidates for this process. Also, single-sheet documents work best. It is rather expensive, however. If the document itself does not have intrinsic value and the information within has only historical value, then a photocopy of the document on acid-free paper may be a better cost-effective measure.

Supplies for encapsulation must be carefully chosen. There is only one type of polyester film that is stable enough to be considered archival—Mylar® Type D (DuPont Corp.) or Melinex® 516 (ICI Americas). It comes in three thicknesses—3, 4 and 5 mil thick. Larger items require heavier film for stability. There is only one type of double-stick tape considered archival and safe for encapsulation—3M Scotch Brand double-stick tape no. 415®.

Since not all materials are candidates for encapsulation, there are other methods of archival storage. There are two-sided “folders” made out of Mylar. These enclosures are permanently sealed on two sides, which allows a document to be accessed from the two open sides. This allows protection during transportation and storage, yet access to a document without destroying the capsule. Three-sided folders are also available, but re-inserting a document might cause inadvertent damage.

Flat boxes of archival quality provide flat storage of documents. There are also file folders with clear fronts, providing viewing of the document from the front, but also protecting it.

There are encapsulation kits available from archival supply houses. There is also a step-by-step plan available on the General Commission web site [www.gcah.org].

Good luck. Happy archiving. If there are specific questions you would like to see addressed in this column, feel free to submit them to the editor.

Things that Should Not Be Encapsulated

⇒ Charcoal drawings
⇒ Pastel drawings
⇒ Thickly applied water colors
⇒ Records with small tears on the boarders where information is lacking
⇒ Some pencil-based writings

Things that Could Be Encapsulated

⇒ Fragile documents with a long tear(s) in them (all the information is still evident)
⇒ Photographs
⇒ Certificates
⇒ Handbills
⇒ Broadsides
⇒ Small textiles such as bookmarks, swatches, etc. [What about those Bible verse memorization cards?!

now within our borders—all of whom have claims upon us for Christian civilization not to be surpassed by those of the heathen of foreign lands.

We believe that the character of a people depends mainly on its homes. Our special aim, therefore, is to improve home environments, home education, home industries, and home influences.”

Lucy Hayes served the Methodist Episcopal Church and our nation well in a time of immigration and expansion and set a mission for our times as well as her own.
