The Center for International Policy promotes cooperation, transparency and accountability in global relations. Through research and advocacy, our programs address the most urgent threats to our planet: war, corruption, inequality and climate change.

A NEW MODEL OF PEACE ADVOCACY

Americans learned an important and painful lesson from the Vietnam War. For a decade, they resisted attempts to involve the United States in another major foreign military occupation. The failed wars in Afghanistan and Iraq have underscored the need to find peaceful solutions to foreign conflicts.

To make sure the lessons of Vietnam, Iraq and Afghanistan are not forgotten, we are expanding our peace, security and human rights work with two new initiatives, one to expand the constituencies in the United States committed to diplomatic peacemaking and another to organize a global coalition of nongovernmental organizations that will coordinate research, education and policy advocacy. Conflicts have become globalized, and to be effective, advocates for peace also must organize global coalitions.

www.ciponline.org
For almost four decades, CIP’s experts have influenced U.S. foreign policy, providing recommendations and analysis to promote a sustainable, just and peaceful world. This legacy continues today as we take innovative approaches to address some of Washington’s most critical issues.

CIP’s Win Without War Coalition of 41 national organizations, from the Sierra Club to MoveOn.org, is the largest anti-war coalition in the United States. Our Arms and Security Project publishes dozens of op-ed articles in the country’s major newspapers as well as in-depth reports and books. Our Project on Defense Alternatives produces alternative and “smart” Pentagon budgets and reports on a range of military issues. Our Security Assistance Monitor Program collects and analyzes all publicly-accessible data about global U.S. security assistance from 2000 to the present. Melvin Goodman, a 23-year veteran of the CIA who has come over to our side, is one of the most credible critics of America’s bloated and intrusive intelligence agencies.

CIP’s in-house expertise gives us credibility with policymakers and the media. Through television and radio interviews, social media and op-ed articles, our staff reach millions of Americans to provide in-depth reports and books. Our Security Assistance Monitor produces alternative and “smart” Pentagon budgets and reports on a range of military issues. Our Security Assistance Monitor Program collects and analyzes all publicly-accessible data about global U.S. security assistance from 2000 to the present. Melvin Goodman, a 23-year veteran of the CIA who has come over to our side, is one of the most credible critics of America’s bloated and intrusive intelligence agencies.

CIP’s Win Without War Coalition of 41 national organizations, from the Sierra Club to MoveOn.org, is the largest anti-war coalition in the United States. Our Arms and Security Project publishes dozens of op-ed articles in the country’s major newspapers as well as in-depth reports and books. Our Project on Defense Alternatives produces alternative and “smart” Pentagon budgets and reports on a range of military issues. Our Security Assistance Monitor Program collects and analyzes all publicly-accessible data about global U.S. security assistance from 2000 to the present. Melvin Goodman, a 23-year veteran of the CIA who has come over to our side, is one of the most credible critics of America’s bloated and intrusive intelligence agencies.

CIP’s in-house expertise gives us credibility with policymakers and the media. Through television and radio interviews, social media and op-ed articles, our staff reach millions of Americans to provide in-depth reports and books. Our Project on Defense Alternatives produces alternative and “smart” Pentagon budgets and reports on a range of military issues. Our Security Assistance Monitor Program collects and analyzes all publicly-accessible data about global U.S. security assistance from 2000 to the present. Melvin Goodman, a 23-year veteran of the CIA who has come over to our side, is one of the most credible critics of America’s bloated and intrusive intelligence agencies.

CIP’s Win Without War Coalition of 41 national organizations, from the Sierra Club to MoveOn.org, is the largest anti-war coalition in the United States. Our Arms and Security Project publishes dozens of op-ed articles in the country’s major newspapers as well as in-depth reports and books. Our Project on Defense Alternatives produces alternative and “smart” Pentagon budgets and reports on a range of military issues. Our Security Assistance Monitor Program collects and analyzes all publicly-accessible data about global U.S. security assistance from 2000 to the present. Melvin Goodman, a 23-year veteran of the CIA who has come over to our side, is one of the most credible critics of America’s bloated and intrusive intelligence agencies.

CIP’s in-house expertise gives us credibility with policymakers and the media. Through television and radio interviews, social media and op-ed articles, our staff reach millions of Americans to provide in-depth reports and books. Our Project on Defense Alternatives produces alternative and “smart” Pentagon budgets and reports on a range of military issues. Our Security Assistance Monitor Program collects and analyzes all publicly-accessible data about global U.S. security assistance from 2000 to the present. Melvin Goodman, a 23-year veteran of the CIA who has come over to our side, is one of the most credible critics of America’s bloated and intrusive intelligence agencies.

CIP’s Win Without War Coalition of 41 national organizations, from the Sierra Club to MoveOn.org, is the largest anti-war coalition in the United States. Our Arms and Security Project publishes dozens of op-ed articles in the country’s major newspapers as well as in-depth reports and books. Our Project on Defense Alternatives produces alternative and “smart” Pentagon budgets and reports on a range of military issues. Our Security Assistance Monitor Program collects and analyzes all publicly-accessible data about global U.S. security assistance from 2000 to the present. Melvin Goodman, a 23-year veteran of the CIA who has come over to our side, is one of the most credible critics of America’s bloated and intrusive intelligence agencies.

CIP’s in-house expertise gives us credibility with policymakers and the media. Through television and radio interviews, social media and op-ed articles, our staff reach millions of Americans to provide in-depth reports and books. Our Project on Defense Alternatives produces alternative and “smart” Pentagon budgets and reports on a range of military issues. Our Security Assistance Monitor Program collects and analyzes all publicly-accessible data about global U.S. security assistance from 2000 to the present. Melvin Goodman, a 23-year veteran of the CIA who has come over to our side, is one of the most credible critics of America’s bloated and intrusive intelligence agencies.

CIP’s Win Without War Coalition of 41 national organizations, from the Sierra Club to MoveOn.org, is the largest anti-war coalition in the United States. Our Arms and Security Project publishes dozens of op-ed articles in the country’s major newspapers as well as in-depth reports and books. Our Project on Defense Alternatives produces alternative and “smart” Pentagon budgets and reports on a range of military issues. Our Security Assistance Monitor Program collects and analyzes all publicly-accessible data about global U.S. security assistance from 2000 to the present. Melvin Goodman, a 23-year veteran of the CIA who has come over to our side, is one of the most credible critics of America’s bloated and intrusive intelligence agencies.

CIP’s in-house expertise gives us credibility with policymakers and the media. Through television and radio interviews, social media and op-ed articles, our staff reach millions of Americans to provide in-depth reports and books. Our Project on Defense Alternatives produces alternative and “smart” Pentagon budgets and reports on a range of military issues. Our Security Assistance Monitor Program collects and analyzes all publicly-accessible data about global U.S. security assistance from 2000 to the present. Melvin Goodman, a 23-year veteran of the CIA who has come over to our side, is one of the most credible critics of America’s bloated and intrusive intelligence agencies.