

UNPACKING WHITE FEMINISM

Hear from Rachel Cargle for her signature live lecture exploring the history of feminism through the lens of race. Uncover layers of unlearned details, revealing the problematic effects that white centered activism has had on the past and present state of the feminist movement. She leaves her audience with new knowledge, meaningful tools, and powerful action items toward a more intentional and inclusive feminism.

1 hour and 20 minutes of live lecturing

Visual and audio enhancements
keeping presentation fresh and interesting

30 minutes of meaningful conversation around material presented

Free "lecture notes" for all attendees developed by Rachel that includes suggestions for further learning

Rachel's work is rooted in providing tools and resources to help facilitate meaningful conversation around the intersection of race and womanhood. An activist and writer, Rachel has developed a passionate community of over 20 thousand people who learn from her work. Currently living in NYC, Rachel is a student at Columbia University where she studies anthropology and women's studies.

Rachel serves as a co-chair for the young professional's board at The Ms. Foundation For Women and is the founder and editor of the State Of The Woman Newsletter. She is also one half of The Ripple, an activist collective founded after the 2016 election giving women a launching pad to make ripples in their community

20k followers
on IG

1.5k community
on FB

Work supported by: Glennon
Doyle, Brene Brown,
Elena Brower, Melissa Hartwig

GETTING ME TO YOUR CITY

Thank you so much for your interest in having me in your city for conversation and community around these issues that matter so much. Being able to do this work is such a gift and I look forward to telling you how things work on my end so that we can come together and #DoTheWork exactly where you are! As a college student and a writer, I will need support in getting to you are making this thing happen. Below I've laid things out on how we get started.

Point of contact.

You're my person! You don't have to be a professional event planner or a full time activist to be on board to get this lecture to the community you live in. Just be willing to do the work to make it happen.

Travel Logistics

It is the responsibility of the hosting community to get me to where they are. This includes flights to and from NYC, ground transportation, one night of board and a small per diem for my meals.

My Presentation

My presentation includes my hour and 20-minute lecture plus 30 minutes of meaningful community conversation and access to my post-event lecture notes for all who are in attendance.

Speakers Fee / Ticket Sales

This work is a boatload of emotional and intellectual labor. My team manages all ticket sales through Eventbrite at $20 per person. This is considered the honorarium, separate from travel costs. P.s. Our team will support you in seeking sponsorship from local businesses and organizations to cover all other costs (travel, event location, etc.)

Ready to make this happen? Shoot me an email at rachel@rachelcargle.com and let me know that you've looked over these high-level details and I can answer any questions you've got so far. Then we can get to digging into the good stuff. Setting a date, seeking a location, setting up ticket sales and making this thing real in your city!