

EMPLOYEES FEEL GOOD ABOUT THEIR BENEFITS, BUT MANY ADMIT ENROLLMENT IS SOMEWHAT OF A MAZE.

Employees are generally happy with their workplace benefits, but many don't know much about them. The 2018 Aflac WorkForces Report reveals that employees need more information about their options – and many trust insurance experts to do the explaining.

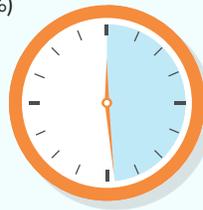

30% need more information about their benefits options, such as out-of-pocket costs and in-network physicians.

45% are more likely to buy insurance if it's recommended by a benefits professional.

The advice of a friend is a motivator for 41%, while 25% are influenced by friends and 22% by their employers.

More than half (56%) spend less than 30 minutes researching their options.

Slightly more than 40% of employees would rather do something uncomfortable or unpleasant – such as three hours of hot yoga or clean up after their dog – than research benefits during open enrollment.

Nearly 1 in 5 (19%) do not feel confident they understood everything they signed up for during their last enrollment.

16% said an easily accessible benefits advisor – in person, by phone or by online chat – is the one thing that would help improve the way they enroll in benefits.

43% prefer to communicate with an insurance agent by email

20% prefer to meet in person

18% prefer over-the-phone conversations.

Filing claims online, by email or by using an app is preferred over non-digital channels by a

ABOUT THE STUDY
