“PRINCIPLE’S WISHLIST” AIMS TO GET CHETWYND SCHOOLS EXTRA SUPPLIES

Pam Engelland, a local you may know from Crazy Beanz Bistro, is gathering extra supplies for Chetwynd schools through a project she calls “Principle’s Wishlist.” She’s hoping to get the community involved, who can help out by purchasing items on a list she received from the schools.

Pam called all of the principles in Chetwynd and told them to ask their teachers for a list of things that they would normally buy for their classrooms themselves. “I thought, well, let’s try and help them out, and see if we can lighten their load a bit, especially in these times.” To be clear, it’s not that our school don’t have any supplies, but the purpose of the project is to focus on those extra items that teachers would use their own money to pay for.

Pam says she doesn’t believe teachers are paid enough, and she was inspired by a mom she knows in Las Vegas who felt the same way. “I stole the idea from a mom down in Vegas, actually. They’re doing it down there, so I thought, well, we can do it up here.”

At the time she was interviewed last Thursday, Pam had received lists from most of the schools in Chetwynd and had already purchased or received some of the things on the list. She encourages people to buy as little or as much as they want, but to contact her first so she doesn’t receive too much of one thing.

To learn more or to find out what supplies are needed so you can pitch in, call or text Pam at 250-788-6543, or email hockeygranny51517@gmail.com

An elderly man in Winnipeg called his son in Vancouver and said,
"I hate to ruin your day, but I have to tell you that your mother and I are divorcing; forty-five years of misery is enough."
Confused, the son said, "Pop, what are you talking about?"
"We can't stand the sight of each other and longer," the older man said, "and I'm sick of talking about this, so call your sister in Ontario and tell her."
Frantic, the son called his sister, who exploded on the phone.
"They're not getting a divorce if I have anything to say about it!" she shouted.
"I'll take care of this."
She called her father immediately.
"You are NOT getting divorced. Don't do a single thing until I get there. I'm calling my brother back and we'll both be there tomorrow. Until then, don't do a thing," she said and hung up the phone.
"Okay," the old man said after hanging up the phone, "they're coming for Thanksgiving... now what should we tell them for Christmas?"

PROVINCE INVESTS IN HYDROGEN TO HELP TRANSITION TO CLEANER ENERGY

The Government of British Columbia has allocated $10 million to the construction and operation of 10 hydrogen fuelling stations in the province, as well as three years of support for Hydrogen BC.

Hydrogen BC is a new entity of the Canadian Hydrogen Fuel Cell Association (CHFCA), with a focus on British Columbia.

“For British Columbia to reach its CleanBC targets, we must shift how we produce and consume energy,” said Bruce Ralston, Minister of Energy, Mines and Petroleum Resources. “Hydrogen will play a significant role in B.C.’s sustainable energy future, generating environmental and economic benefits across the province.”

The minister made the funding announcement on Thursday, Sept. 10, 2020, in Vancouver at f-cell+HFC 2020, an online conference where international specialists discuss solutions for clean energy focused on hydrogen and fuel cells.

Hydrogen BC is a new provincial partnership that will co-ordinate stakeholders in the sector to promote and accelerate the use of hydrogen technologies in B.C., including fuelling stations and vehicles. Hydrogen BC operates as part of the CHFCA. Its membership is expected to be made up of automakers, major energy and industrial gas companies, hydrogen fuelling infrastructure suppliers, universities, non-governmental organizations, governments and fleet users, such as ports, carshares and transit agencies.

British Columbia has the largest hydrogen fuelling network and the first public hydrogen fuelling station in Canada. There are currently three public hydrogen fuelling stations operating in the province (including one opened on June 25, 2020), with three more to open by the end of 2021. The three operating stations are in Vancouver, Burnaby and North Vancouver. The three stations under development are in Saanich, Kelowna and Burnaby.

The development of hydrogen fuelling stations in B.C. helps the province achieve its targets in the Zero Emission Vehicles Act and supports its leadership in Canada with the highest per-capita electric-vehicle adoption.

B.C. is home to world-leading hydrogen technology companies. The development of hydrogen fuelling stations leads to the development of good jobs. British Columbia’s zero-emissions vehicle (ZEV) sector includes an estimated 250 companies that provide 6,000 full-time equivalent jobs (up by 2,150 from 2015) and contribute $600 million to the provincial gross domestic product (GDP) – almost double the 2015 GDP contribution of $373 million. Combined with indirect and induced economic impacts, the B.C. ZEV sector supports over 10,400 full-time equivalent jobs and contributes $1.1 billion to B.C.’s GDP.

“Through our CleanBC climate and economic plan, we’re working with industry to support the transition to cleaner technologies like hydrogen to help meet our emissions reductions targets and support good jobs for people across the province,” said George Heyman, Minister of Environment and Climate Change Strategy. “Sustainably produced hydrogen holds enormous potential to change the way we fuel our vehicles and address the challenge of clean, low-emission heavy-duty truck transportation as we work together to build a cleaner, better B.C. following the impacts of COVID-19.”

The $10 million in funding comes before the fall 2020 release of a hydrogen strategy for British Columbia. The strategy will set out a vision for how B.C. will meet its clean energy goals by supporting the use of hydrogen to reduce pollution and will identify more job opportunities for British Columbians.

Hydrogen plays an important role in B.C.’s sustainable energy future and provides opportunity for sectors to deliver safe and cost-efficient emissions reductions. Fuel production and refining sectors will be able to create less carbon-intensive fuels for use in B.C.’s existing infrastructure. The natural gas sector can blend hydrogen into natural gas distribution systems to reduce pollution associated with generating heat and hot water. The transportation sector can use hydrogen in fuel-cell electric vehicles to help replace diesel used in medium- and heavy-duty transportation.

CleanBC is a pathway to a more prosperous, balanced and sustainable future. It was developed in collaboration with the BC Green Party caucus and Andrew Weaver, MLA for Oak Bay-Gordon Head, and supports the commitment in the Confidence and Supply Agreement to implement climate action to meet B.C.’s emission targets.

COVID-19: SURVIVING CHALLENGING TIMES

The world of business is going through some serious tough times. It's very likely your business has been hit hard and you may be licking your wounds right now. But, what do you do next? Do you try to wait it out, survive long enough in the hope that as things begin to settle down you will be able to rise like a phoenix from the ashes? The trouble with that strategy is that we don't know if things will ever return to the old normal. Now might be a good time to see if there is any way you can adapt your business to fit the new reality. That may be an impossibility depending on what business you are in, or it might mean starting to look at what consumers want in this new world. If you can't adapt, what else can you start using your existing assets and resources as a springboard for?

Let's take a look at the businesses that are doing well in spite of, or because of, the pandemic. As you read on, consider whether your business could find a way to meet any of these new, or enhanced, needs.

The most obvious winners are online retailers. They were already doing well but now their businesses have been fast-tracked. Business for this industry has never been better. If you are a local retailer you probably spit blood when you hear about their success, but if you can't beat them, have you thought about joining them? When and if all this ends, will brick and mortar retailing ever be the same as it was before the virus? Unlikely. Think long and hard about how you can offer online purchasing, delivery etc.

If you aren't a retailer consider how you might benefit from major online retailers' success. Could you start a delivery, or courier service in your community? Amazon and the like have seen their need for local delivery services increase exponentially.

What other businesses are thriving? There is a surprising variety of other booming business sectors: grocery stores, online cooking courses (and courses on just about anything else) wine, beer and liquor stores, videoconference platforms, streaming services (Netflix had it's best quarter ever this year), and home and garden centres (one source indicates that online page views for this sector are up 140%). And that's not all, pet adoption has increased as people spend more time at home; beauty products for both men and women, especially anything to do with cutting and trimming one's own hair, have boomed. People are buying more coffee and coffee machines with which to make their favorite beverage as they are forced (or prefer) to drink at home. People are baking more, cooking more elaborate food, and eating at home more.

Sales of almost anything to do with fitness and health from road bicycles to exercise bikes and from fitness and health apps to diets have soared. Reports indicate that almost 3-million fitness equipment apps have been downloaded since all this started. And, sales of indoor and outdoor games equipment such as table tennis tables and pool tables have gone crazy.

As restrictions begin to ease, local tourism is set to explode. Cabins in remote locations have seen a surge in popularity as going off-the-grid is trending. People may not be able to go abroad at the moment but they are starting to become stir crazy so they will be looking to visit and stay within province or territory. And, think about the Canadian snowbirds. The Canadian Snowbird Association alone has 110,000 members. They may not be able to head south so what opportunities exist with this "captive" audience? The sun lovers may stay at home, but a percentage will still want the change of scenery that they are used to experiencing. Think RV sales and rental, or a service to help them figure out what next? What about lakeside, beach, or mountain retreats (it may be winter here but it's still an experience).

There's no doubt there will be fewer businesses around when this is all over. Being creative, innovative and entrepreneurial now, may help you become one of the survivors in a far smaller business gene pool. Now is not the time to sit and wait, it's time to figure out a way forward.

I'd never had surgery, and I was nervous.

"This is a very simple, noninvasive procedure," the anesthesiologist reassured me. I felt better, until... "Heck," he continued, "you have a better chance of dying from the anesthesia than the surgery itself."

While carrying 3-year-old Matthew up the stairs, I told him, "Just think, when you get older you can carry me up the stairs." He thought about this and then, with a worried look, he asked, "Will you be any smaller?"
