CANADIANS CASHING IN AT THE GROCERY AISLE

New cash back app pays shoppers who save.

(NC) With the shrinking loonie and rising cost of groceries, Canadians are finding it a challenge to keep their refrigerators full and the pantries stocked. Most find themselves constantly running back to the store to replenish the staple products they need and are desperately looking for ways to save.

This is what Katia François was experiencing before she decided to take control of her situation. The 37 year-old professional civil servant and mother from Ottawa started following daily sales offers at different stores, clipping coupons, and on a recommendation from a friend, downloaded on her phone a new savings app called Zweet.

This is when things started to change. Not only was she saving on staple items she needed at home, she was receiving cash back cheques from savings on her grocery purchases. The new app was designed to replace cumbersome grocery coupons with a next generation model where shoppers take a picture of their receipt, upload to Zweet's mobile app to confirm the claimed purchases from weekly offers and watch the savings accumulate in their account within 24 hours. Once they hit the $20 mark in their account users can request to have a cheque mailed to them.

François is one of over 300,000 Canadians across the country that have downloaded the free mobile app to take advantage of the cash back savings on popular products from companies such as Danone, Mondelēz, L'Oréal, Frito-Lay and Pfizer with many more brands joining every day.

In just 11 months and with practically no promotion over 600,000 receipts have been submitted and over $370,000 have been earned by users. Most people hear about the app through word of mouth from friends and family.

CANADIANS CASHING IN AT THE GROCERY AISLE

Shoppers learn about discount offers via weekly emails or by browsing the app. Discounts are offered on everything from cereal, milk and packaged goods to fruits and vegetables. While they're saving on their groceries, consumers can also accumulate points for each product claimed. Points can then be redeemed for retailer gift cards, like Tim Hortons, or offered as cash donations to charity.

"As a mother and a professional I'm always looking for ways to save on the increasing costs of groceries and when I discovered this app I was amazed at how easy it was and how much money I was saving per month," added François.

François fits the profile of the majority of Zweet users as 86 per cent are women from 21-48 years-old with a post-secondary education and 63 per cent have children.

"The feedback we've been receiving from both consumers and companies has been phenomenal. It's what keeps us motivated to continue bringing more and more amazing deals to Canadians," said CEO Eduardo Mandri. More information is available at www.zweet.com.

MEET THE MAYOR

April 15, 2015

Chetwynd's close and intimate association with our forests goes back to the time before Chetwynd was. First inhabitants drew their sustenance primarily from harvesting the animals native to the forests. Later migrants to the area built their log cabins and cleared small plots for gardens and hay fields. Then others, seeing an economic opportunity, brought primitive sawmills to the valley and earned their meager incomes by the sweat of their brows. Some prospered.

Fast forward to the present. Chetwynd is in a continuing close and intimate relationship with the surrounding forests and hundreds of our families earn respectable livings, pay their mortgages, take vacations, and send their offspring to post secondary education on the strength of our forest-based economy.

I spent two days recently at the annual Council of Forest Industries convention in Prince George. Approximately 600 attendees were given the latest in market trends, challenges, and innovative developments in the industry. Our recent ancestors, innovative risk takers as they were, would have to strain their credulity to recognize what happens to the tree once the machines get into the forest. Yes, and even I am in awe of the uses found in the tree of which we never dreamed a generation ago.

We thought of boards, sawdust, and slabs. Haul the boards to the planer; burn the slabs in the bush; leave the sawdust pile when the mill moves to the next stand.

It can't be that way anymore. We have to utilize the whole tree to make our operations viable. Example: up to the present West Fraser Mills in Chetwynd has been burning tons of wood waste every day in the beehive burner. Within a few weeks that wood waste will be waste no longer; it will be converted to electrical power. The beehive burner will be demolished – the last of its kind in the area and the new revenue source will help to make sawmilling more sustainable in a very competitive lumber market.

Another example of the industry's attempts to remain competitive is Canfor's building a lignin plant at Hinton, Alberta. Lignin is a complex substance that forms the bulk of the woody structure of the trees. By reducing the waste material to lignin, a hitherto untapped revenue source is made available. Lignin production on a commercial scale is something only dreamed of in the last decade.

Architects, chemists, and economists are busily developing other ways to make the tree more than wood and bark. (It's much more than wood and bark in the first place. We are simply attempting to discover more of the secrets the Creator hid beneath the bark.) But it's a long process to move from discovery of previously unknown features through extracting them and making them commercially viable to actually gaining market niches for the products.

In the meantime, lumber remains the backbone of the industry and Chetwynd remains well positioned to prosper as a result of firm regional fiber supplies and stable markets and prices.

WINDREM ELEMENTARY SCHOOL SCIENCE FAIR

was held on Friday, April 10th. There were lots of amazing displays and great questions!

Three Scots and three Irishmen are traveling by train to a conference. At the station, the three Irishmen each buy tickets and watch as the three Scots buy only a single ticket. "How are three people going to travel on only one ticket?" asks an Irishman. "Watch and you'll see," answers a Scot. They all board the train. The Irishmen take their respective seats but all three Scots cram into a bathroom and close the door behind them. Shortly after the train has departed, the conductor comes around collecting tickets. He knocks on the bathroom door and says, "Ticket, please." The door opens just a crack and a single arm emerges with a ticket in hand. The conductor takes it and moves on. The Irishmen see this and agree it was quite a clever idea.

So after the conference, the Irishmen decide to copy the Scots on the return trip and save some money (being clever with money, and all that). When they get to the station, they buy a single ticket for the return trip. To their astonishment, the Scots don't buy a ticket at all.

"How are you going to travel without a ticket?" says one perplexed Irishman. Watch and you'll see," answers a Scot.

When they board the train the three Irishmen cram into a bathroom and the three Scots cram into another one nearby. The train departs. Shortly afterwards, one of the Scots leaves his bathroom and walks over to the bathroom where the Irishmen are hiding. He knocks on the door and says, "Ticket, please."
