STRANGE PRINCE GEORGE BREAK AND ENTER

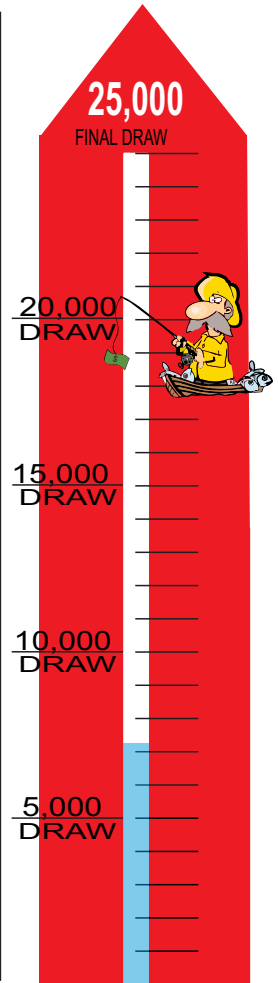

An investigation into a summer break in Prince George is becoming a little more eerie.

RCMP are now asking for public assistance in identifying a man responsible for a July break and enter on the 1800 block of Tamarak Street.

During the investigation, police seized multiple strange items belonging to the suspect, including a crude hand-held weapon made from nails, electrical tape and a handle, and a Guy Fawkes mask splattered in multiple colours of paint.

Despite these items being seized, police have had no luck in identifying the suspect, and are asking for help in doing so.

If you have any information you believe to be of assistance, you are asked to contact your local RCMP detachment.

MAYOR'S REPORT

January 12, 2018

It's January, noticeably January (though it has warmed by 40 degrees since those last bitter chill days of December), and the commerce of the community is rolling past on steel and rubber with intelligent (I trust), self-aware beings at the controls who, I have to trust, are themselves aware of other selves sharing the road with them. It was actually revitalizing to come to work this second day of 2018 after a few days of semi-comatose rest and relaxation, cowering indoors from the cold, during which I read at least one book and parts of half a dozen other books plus several journals, and to see the evidence of industry at work. Wide loads with flashing pilots on their way to job sites, empty coal haulers heading back to the mine, loaded log trucks about to deliver their goods to the mills, trucks weighed down with lumber turning on to the highways with cargos destined to build new houses in far-away places. Beautiful!

Schools are back in session; young scholars are pushing the limits of their imaginations as they wonder when they will ever have to use quadratic equations or that pesky second law of something or other about which the Mayor is forever ranting.

No, my young friends, you will never have to use either in many career options. But if you ever aspire to grow up the steps of responsibility at Canfor or at West Fraser or at Enbridge or at BC Hydro or in government, or in your own business, you will never say, on reaching the heights (of any profession), "Why did I ever waste my time studying history or literature or mathematics or science." Of that I am certain and I will bet my old age on its truth.

History, literature, science, art, mathematics, all sharpen the intellect, open doors, even doors unseen and unimagined. These disciplines are the lenses through which you will see and interpret the world. They are the filters through which you will sift the data from the media, the government, the tax office, and every other source of information or misinformation north or south of 49. They are the keys that will open the future that you cannot now even imagine (and neither can I).

Yes, of course you can argue, quite rightly, that some of the most successful people the world has ever produced were not highly successful as students. I could name a couple of them. (Just saw another load of logs roll into town on Goodyear rubber. It's quite likely that the engineers in the Goodyear plant developing always-safer, always-more-durable rubber did not give up on their formal education in grade 11.) But your chances of success and satisfaction in ten or twenty years are vastly increased if you develop strong self-discipline now in your formative years, while your parents are paying the bills. (Incidentally, that ten or twenty years will go by just as fast if you do nothing about your intellect.)

I didn't start out to rant about the importance of getting an education. It just happened. Once I typed "schools are" there was no turning back. I guess I got that from my mom who, in our rugged life in the bush, kept insisting that I would go to college. As it happens, she was right. But don't ever think that education stops when you walk out of the classroom for the last time with your Red Seal or High School Diploma or College Degree. The classroom is only the beginning. You've got to keep reading, keep studying, keep probing the limits of your intellect – or die intellectually. Pity the college grad who never cracks another book. They're out there.

So, moms and dads, Chetwynd might be built on wheels and prosper on wheels, but it's the minds of your kids who will keep the wheels turning and really make this town a place of wonder and amazement to those passing through. Inspire your offspring by personal reading, by personally stretching your own minds, by increasing your skills in whatever field you work. Visit the library, the soul of the community, and spend time there with your kids while they are young and then don't drop the habit. Incidentally, the library is the subject of much thought and discussion at Council and with the Peace River Regional District. It needs attention in the most immediate way. Keep in touch with developments as we study the options.

By the way, the heights by great men and women reached and kept were not attained by sudden flight but they, while their companions slept, were toiling upward in the night (author forgotten).

Happy and prosperous 2018.

STATE OF THE NORTH REPORT SHEDS LIGHT ON NORTHERN BC ECONOMY

Northern Development Initiative Trust and MNP have released a State of the North report to provide community and business leaders with regional data about the economy.

The report gives general data about Northern BC, with sections devoted to specific regions.

Notably, the report says Northeast BC is the only part of Northern BC that has steady population growth. Between 2011 and 2016, the population grew by 7 per cent, and mostly in Fort St. John and surrounding areas. The report suggests this is due to the nearby construction of the Site C dam and oil and gas exploration. Overall, employment has also remained steady, with the forestry and construction sectors growing while the oil, gas, and mining sectors shrank.

The report also says that median wages are higher in the northeast than in other northern BC regions, due to significant mining, oil, and gas industry in the area. According to the report, the median housing prices have jumped between 8.5 and 27.6 per cent in the major districts in the region, while Tumbler Ridge's median housing prices have plummeted by 23 per cent.

KELSEY'S CHRONICLE

Every January in the US, the Consumer Electronics Show takes over Las Vegas for a week of the world's leading tech manufacturers showcasing their latest innovative ideas. The Consumer Electronics Show has taken place almost every year since 1967 when they held their first convention in New York City. This year, CES is hosting 4000 exhibitors from over 150 countries. These exhibitors range from multi million dollar tech giants right down to beginning entrepreneurs.

If I were to start naming off all of the cool gadgets ready to hit the market I would be here for days but here are a few you'll want to add to your birthday wish list.

Beginning with the showdown of a lifetime, between Amazon's Alexa and Google Home personal assistants. These devices can assist you in your day to day by just saying the word's Alexa, or Google home- 'Do this!' Wow and to think people use to have to do things themselves...

Along the same lines as the personal assistants, there were a bunch of great new Artificial Intelligence gadgets you could invest in, and when I say invest I'm talking thousands for some of these new robots including robotic cats and dogs, sleep robot pillows that simulates breathing to help relax, or the suitcase equipped with the technology to follow you. There is even stripper robots, some were not sure how to feel about these, and after seeing the pictures, I just had to laugh!

Some other products which have already hit the market but have had updates include cordless charging pads which were a hot topic and were pretty popular, with several companies showcasing their versions. Virtual Reality goggles were all the rave with several demonstrations.

In the area of strange and interesting, you can purchase a toilet that has the tech to lift and close the lid autonomously, among other bidet features, it even plays music! You know, to make sure you don't get lonely in the bathroom, but then again if you have children then you already know the struggle of alone time in the bathroom. There is also a lawnmower that looks very similar to its inside counterpart, the vacuum. This "Roomba" style lawnmower can trim your grass without you even stepping outside, genius! Dangerous, but genius!

It seems the world is very quickly becoming autonomous, this year there were several new companies showcasing their autonomous vehicles and it's pretty safe to say, this will be the way of the world within the next decade. With so many features and options it looks like a sci-fi movie of "future".

These are just a few of the highlights of 2018's CES in Vegas, which has come to be known as "the global stage of innovation". If you love checking out new tech and gadgets as much as I do, go by CES's website to see more of the great innovative ideas showcased at this years convention.
