FIVE TIPS FOR BEAUTIFUL FEET

Winter or summer alike, your feet deserve to be pampered. Although they are often neglected, feet need regular care in order to look good. For beautiful feet, be sure to follow these five tips.

1. Cleaning

Use a moisturizing soap and make sure to remove all the dirt under your toenails. Gently pat dry your feet, paying special attention to the areas between your toes, which is a fertile ground for fungus.

2. Removing dead skin

Do you have corns on your feet? These layers of dead cells form naturally to protect you from the pain caused by wearing ill-fitting shoes. Use a pumice stone or emery board to get rid of them. Don't be too rough, or you could end up hurting yourself.

3. Moisturize

Massaging your feet once a week with a moisturizer will increase blood circulation while softening the skin. A great trick is to apply a generous layer of cream before going to bed and put on a pair of comfortable cotton socks. Your feet will be amazingly soft in the morning.

4. Nails

Beautiful feet need pretty toenails. File them regularly to prevent the formation of ingrown toenails. If they are very long, use a nail clipper first and then smooth them down with a file or emery board.

5. Professional care

Make an appointment with a foot care professional for a complete treatment once a year, or more often if you'd like to have this simple luxury on a regular basis. You'll feel pampered and you'll be ready to set off on the right foot.

KAREN STEWART

was rushed to the ER with a possible heart attack. She was transferred to Vancouver, where Drs. are still trying to figure out 100% what's going on. Stroke and heart attack are top of the list right now. Tom and Travis are with her, which means extra costs. This is going to help them stay there and give Karen the support she needs. They are a family that does so much for others in the community, especially at Christmas with the hamper foundation. Every little bit helps. If you wish to donate, please go to GOFUNDME on Facebook.

MEET THE MAYOR

February 5, 2016

By any standard of the world, our home town is a pretty good place to call home. No, we don't have white, sandy beaches lying in the shade of coconut palms, caressed by soothing breezes, and washed by blue-green seas. No, we don't have a lot of things. Still, by any standard...

We have most of what we need: stability in the work environment (for the most part); flexibility in job opportunities; room and opportunity for personal growth; and what the vast majority of this world's transient population would call perks – and all of us are transient (no, I'm not referring to food, clothing, and shelter).

We have the best of almost everything; still, change happens and we have to learn to embrace the unknown, the unfamiliar, maybe even the unfriendly. Like the six-year-old boy with his dad, his hands clasped behind his head and his eyes closed, sighing contentedly he breathes out his happiness: "Dad this is life; you, me, and my I-pad."

And change is happening to us as we go about our familiar routines. A year ago I reported on the robust hopes for the lumber industry. We are still hopeful but not nearly so robust. At the Premier's BC Natural Resources Forum I chanced to have lunch with the Lead Negotiator in the Soft-Wood Lumber negotiations sometime to be undertaken with the United States. I can't report that things are going well or not well. The best description is that though the latest treaty expired some months ago, we are not yet going anywhere.

That said, I have to give credit where credit is due: to the industry. The behemoth to the south will never go away and would love nothing as much as for our lumber industry to go away. We aren't going to go there any time soon. The forest industry in British Columbia has been hedging against the known threat. Locally, our two sawmills are well positioned: the timber supply is secure and adequate and each of them has built and commissioned a subsidiary plant that will absorb much of the shock of a difficult lumber market.

Conditions are not nearly so hopeful in much of the rest of British Columbia. The fibre supply is diminishing as a result of the pine beetle epidemic that has raged for the last fifteen or so years. Mills will close during the next five to ten years. Communities will be disrupted. Even by standards of rural British Columbia, our home town looks pretty healthy, quite safe, and certainly friendly.

But I don't want us to start taking our blessings for granted. Change happens in the most unexpected ways, at the most unexpected times. Personal preparation, corporate preparation, and municipal preparation don't happen by chance. Preparation always precedes luck.

For some, preparation involves taking advantage of mom and dad for support in education and training; for many of us preserving our assets ranks high; and that applies to the District of Chetwynd as well.

Merlin Nichols, Mayor

FAMILY DAY IS FOR BUILDING COMMUNITIES

Families make up a community

You know the expression "The family that plays together stays together"? When you gather together your own family, and add your enthusiasm and creativity to those of other families, what you get is a vibrant and cohesive neighbourhood.

Arrange a neighbourhood garbage clean-up. On Family Day, or at any time of year, set a meeting time and invite participants to bring garbage bags, gloves and some good humour. Everybody chooses a sector and sweeps through it, picking up trash. If everybody brings a picnic, you can all have lunch together when the roving cleanup is finished.

Volunteer. Talk to your kids about their talents and skills and interests. See if there's a way they can share them with their community as volunteers, perhaps as junior coaches or at the food bank once a month. Don't forget that your volunteerism is the best way to role model it for your kids.

BE GOOD NEIGHBOURS

Be helpful with those around you, especially if they're elderly or vulnerable. On Family Day, why not invite a lonely neighbour over for dinner, or offer to tidy up their yard as a family.

No matter how you choose to celebrate family life this year, if you do it along with others it will only make your community stronger.
