How to Store & Preserve Banknotes

by Gilbert Chang, Certified Numismatist

This is a very important question that every SERIOUS COLLECTOR will ask at some stage of their collecting journey. More often than not, this issue is often overlooked or completely ignored by many collectors which often resulted in untold damage and financial losses. While most people enjoy the thrill of the chase when they are acquiring a sought after coin or banknote, they tend to forget that keeping the collection safe from damage or environmental harm is critical in retaining its grade and market value.

Here's a few quick and easy DO's and DON'Ts to protect your precious collection from mishandling, fungus, fading, insect damage and foxing :

DOs

1. Use acid free banknote sleeves

The usual soft plastic bags made from polyvinyl chloride or PVC will start to breakdown and become acidic. This acid will harm the paper stored in it and may cause it to turn yellow. To prevent this from happening, please use ACID FREE plastic sleeves from well established brands like Lindner, Lighthouse or equivalent brands which has been around for a long time. It allows you to hold the banknote up for a closer look while preventing contaminants from coming into contact with the banknote. Oriented Polypropylene or OPP plastic sleeves may be used as a cheaper alternative.

But keeping them in acid free sleeves alone is NOT ENOUGH, you need to

2. Keep them in a low humidity environment

Humidity is the amount of water or moisture in the air around us. The humidity in tropical climate like in countries Malaysia and Singapore ranges from 70% to 95%, which can cause serious problems for your collection and it is one of the major causes of paper "foxing" i.e. the paper will start to turn yellow. Fungi is another major enemy that thrives on wet air that can practically kill an uncirculated note. So it is important that you keep your stuff in a low humidity environment. How low is low? The museum standard for the storage and preservation of paper based artefacts is between 45% to 55%, therefore you should aim to keep the humidity at that range as much as possible.

Depending on your budget, here are 2 different ways to accomplish this :

A. Air Tight Plastic Containers with Silica Gels

You can keep your collection in plastic airtight containers along with some silica gel that absorbs the moisture from the air inside the container. In order to measure the humidity, you can buy a small hygrometer, which costs less than RM10 and they are available in most local hardware shops like Daiso. Transparent plastic container with an air tight cover is preferred, that way you can put the hygrometer at along the side with the meter facing outside, that way you can read the humidity without the need to open the container. Once the container is opened, the moisture from the outside will go in and the humidity level will increase.

One downside of this arrangement is that the silica gels are one time use only. Once they absorb the moisture in the container, they will turn from blue colour to pink. When that happens, they need to be replaced, which can be a hassle sometimes.

Another advantage of an airtight plastic container – it helps prevent insect damage. Cockroaches, silverfish and other paper eating critters loves to chew on your banknotes. Just be sure to check that your items are insect free before putting them into the container.

B. Dehumidifier Cabinet

These are fridge like cabinets that has a small dehumidifier motor inside it that maintains the humidity inside at a specified level. They are also known as "dry box". Most camera or photography shops will sell these black colour boxes with a glass door and they come in various sizes depending on your needs. This is a much more effective option in the long run - the box usually comes with a digital hygrometer and you can set the humidity level you want and it will automatically maintain it at that level. Saves you a lot of hassle in replacing those silica gels!

One important thing to keep in mind, please DO NOT GO BELOW 30% humidity, if the humidity is too low, it takes the water out of the paper and the paper will become brittle and break off easily.

3. Stay Cool

Keep your collection away from hot places, room temperature should be kept between 20°C to 24°C. Do not place your items next to a wall that is exposed to the late afternoon sun or next to equipment that generates a lot of heat. Paper will deteriorate faster under higher temperatures.

4. Keep away from dust

If you keep your banknote collection in files or binders, do try to get those with a box or slip case which the binder can slide into. If you put your album on an open bookshelf, the dust from the environment will go in from the top of the uncovered binder and cause some serious damage like dirt and stains. It will be best to keep your albums in a closed shelf or in a dehumidifier cabinet.

DON'Ts

1. Expose them to direct sunlight for long periods

Sunlight has a bleaching effect, that's due mainly to the ultraviolet light, the bright colours on the printed paper will fade when exposed to sunlight for long periods.

2. Touch the banknotes with your bare hands or worse, sneeze or cough into them

The human hand is perhaps the most contaminated part of the human body. It contains anything from sweat (which is salty), oils (from your face or other places like your food), bacteria, fungi and God knows what else. The last thing you want is depositing these things on to your collection which will cause stains later on. If you must touch the banknotes please wash your hands first or you can use a banknote tong or tweezer. As mentioned earlier, please use the appropriate plastic banknote sleeves to protect it.

So there you have it, just a few simple rules to keep in mind and it doesn't take a lot of time to do or to comply with. If you need any help or advice in choosing or getting any one of the items described here, do feel free to contact us at help@alphanumis.com and in the meantime

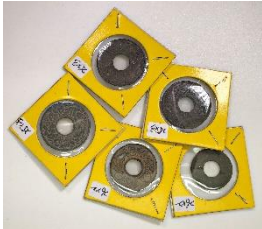

Happy Collecting!
