He has been a men's health writer for several publications over the last fifteen years and produces emale Australia's largest circulation free monthly men's health and wellbeing ebulletin.

Greg published "Men's health & wellbeing: an a – z guide" in 2010. It is a first on three levels, the first a- z guide to men's health and wellbeing; the first book written by a highly experienced men's health promotion worker and the first comprehensive book to look at men's health in the context of men's lives: their physical, emotional, social, psychological, spiritual and cultural environments. The book has been highly praised around Australia in health and lifestyle journals and online.

"A new book "Men's health & wellbeing: an a – z guide" shows us how far men have changed and are changing. Greg Millan's book is written in very simple, plain language, intended for the average Joe and his partner. It encompasses an enormous range of topics. Greg says we must help men better deal with services, and encourage services to deal better with men. Let me stress how easy this book is to read. People want to read about their health in clear language that does not daunt them. There is a recommendation from Dr Mike Lowy and other men's health experts. This book should be in every doctor's waiting room and library. Teachers, men's health workers and other professionals will find it indispensable. Men's health is something everyone should work to improve."

Peter West, PhD, is an educational consultant. He works in boys' education, men's health and relationships.

"There are several men in private business delivering men's health education Greg Millan is by far the most published and cited individual in this area. With a background in social work, Greg primarily delivers programs and courses that adopt a social model of health. Greg also delivers health professional education on the same theme."
