

America's Response Negates Evolution

Posted by Dr. Gary H. Cote on October 15, 2001

Considering the recent events that have traumatized America, and reflecting on the response by the American people and politicians, it seems appropriate to conclude that the “Theory of Evolution” is now obsolete. The scientific quest to remove God from the hearts and minds of people by systematically indoctrinating students at the earliest levels of education should be sidelined, benched permanently. On September 11, 2001 America turned its eyes to God, found comfort in God, called upon God, and sought answers from God. Since September 11, 2001 politicians have been courting the sorrow and compassion of America’s heart. Praises and prayers have been directed toward God from all walks of life. By this response America dismissed Evolution as a viable theory. America exposed the weakness of “Evolution” and revealed its true nature—theory without substance. Even the ACLU knew to hide its face in shame, knowing the prayers and praises to God by American people and American politicians at this time was not a fight to pick. However, if the American people and politicians step aside and allow evolutionary principles to return to their place of prominence in our educational system, then the prayers and praises offered were meaningless, futile, and a farce. Shall we merely allow “God language” to console us during times of difficulty, or do we now conclude that God is truly God and we are His created beings?

If evolution returns, as it will surely attempt to do (for when man dismisses God as insignificant, then delusional man gains the highest order of beings—God’s position), then I dare say the most inappropriate action for America to take is to confront terrorists under the name of justice, for there is no justice in the animal kingdom. The animal kingdom is one of survival without consideration to morals, conscience, rightness, or fair play. If we are the glorified, advanced ape beast as Evolution expounds, then we must merely respond, rather react, as sophisticated, technologically advanced beasts defending our territory, our tribe, and maintaining our place of dominance. However, if we are created beings in the image of God, then let justice rule, let freedom ring, let honor sound, let peace prevail, and let integrity of heart guide us as we seek to be what God intends us to be.
