The Future Way to Work

We are reengineering the commuting model, placing multi-company Enterprise Centers where employees live and play, allowing companies to access talent, and employees more efficient access to work.

Strategic locations of Enterprise Centers® mitigate congestion while improving security, readiness and continuity of operations.

About Us

STRATEGY, FLEXIBILITY AND CHANGE

“The future is already here – it's just not evenly distributed.” - William Gibson

The Economist, December 4, 2003

At Strategic Office Networks, LLC, we understand that change is not always easy. While Information and Communications Technologies have permeated every aspect of our society and economy, we have yet to construct an integrated, secure and holistic approach to apply their full potential to our most critical challenges.

Distributed Metropolitan Design® is the first step.

Are you ready to step into the future with us?

If so, we are excited to work with you.

The Future Way to Work

Changing times require game changing plans.

Is Your Community a Candidate for an Enterprise Center?

How many daily commuters leave from or go through your community to work somewhere else?

How many daily commuters work for major commercial and government employers?

Are you looking for ways to expand job opportunities for part-time workers, students, and those with disabilities?

Are you looking for ways to leverage Information and Communications Technologies?

Do you want to offer:

- distance learning classrooms,
- workforce development,
- job training,
- remote clinics

Are you dealing with issues of cybersecurity, emergency preparedness and continuity of operations?

We can help to provide an integrated strategy and practical framework for success.

STRATEGIC OFFICE NETWORKS, LLC
Creating a Better Way to Work

Strategic Office Networks recognizes the challenges faced by rapidly growing and expanding communities. Getting people to work is becoming more difficult and costly.

We assess communities and regions by labor clusters' and respective employer locations. We look to help communities develop integrated technology strategies that achieve economic viability.

We implement networked Enterprise Centers to make more jobs from more employers locally accessible to more people.

What is Distributed Metropolitan Design®?

As more communities grow in a metropolitan area, the need for a better, more inclusive model for getting people to work increases. Distributed Metropolitan Design® offers a new approach built upon secure information technologies infrastructure. It expands employment opportunities where people live across a metropolitan or regional area while relieving traffic congestion at the most critical junctures.

Unlike working from home, Distributed Metropolitan Design® offers workers a permanent office close to home.

What are Enterprise Centers®?

Enterprise Centers® will support several hundred to several thousand employees in each community. Real estate and technology are integrated in a new way to preserve and improve the inherent strengths of organizations while enhancing worker productivity and improving quality of life in more communities.

Every Enterprise Center will be connected to the region's secure network and to the area's major commercial and government employers. Enterprise Centers® may include distance learning, medical clinics and workforce development activities.

Distributed Metropolitan Design® aligns public and private sector interests to create a more effective way to connect employers and workers. The alliance of local real estate, technology and community leaders along with regional employers will create the right environment for this game changing innovation.
