

WHO said it

WHO SAID IT?

The Idea: This is like the reverse version on The Newlywed Game, where the guests are put to the test!

Ground work: Before the shower, ask the couple to answer questions about their love story (how they met, their first date, the vacations they've taken together). Make a list of their answers, and mix up the responses, so there's no way to know who said what. Take out any names or pronouns that would make it obvious who said what, like "The first thing that attracted me was (his/ her) smile." Finally, print out copies of the list of quotes for all the guests.

How to Play: Pass out the list of quotes to each guest and have them draw a circle around the ones they think the guest of honour said. Whoever pairs the most statements correctly wins the game.
