

*Goldman Communications Expands Asia-Pacific Focus
Alex McMillan Partners With Goldman Team as Managing Director, China and Asia*

Toronto and Hong Kong – February 5, 2018 – Goldman Communications is pleased to announce the firm’s expansion into the Asia-Pacific region with known veteran business and personal finance journalist Alex McMillan.

As Managing Director, China and Asia, Alex will focus on developing and fostering new and existing relationships with Hong Kong and Asia-based clients, as well as with local media.

McMillan’s career as an international business correspondent, feature writer and editor spans 25 years and most of the globe, covering financial news in North America, Europe and across Asia. His work has been featured in The New York Times, The Wall Street Journal, Japanese-language publication J-Money and the South China Morning Post, among many others.

“McMillan brings not only unparalleled experience covering business news in China and Asia, but also a wealth of knowledge and contacts that will be incredibly valuable in helping our clients gain exposure to this important market, and vice versa,” says Goldman Communications founder and CEO Corey Goldman. “We are excited to be expanding our offering to Asia under Alex’s capable leadership.”

“I am thrilled to be partnering with Goldman in offering counsel and support for companies and individuals looking to get their message out to an Asia audience – and for Asia-based companies and individuals looking for more of a presence abroad,” says McMillan.

McMillan also has an interest in travel writing and adventure sports, as well as personal fitness. When he is not covering international business stories, he is either working on travel stories or his company, Mid Age Man, which offers personal training and health advice, among other things, for people in “mid-age.”
