DMC Disposition Questionnaire

This questionnaire was developed to try to address questions related to the generalisability of the directed motivational current (DMC) framework (the most detailed summary of which can be found in Dörnyei, Z., Henry, A., & Muir, C. (2016). Motivational currents in language learning: Frameworks for focused interventions. New York: Routledge). The results were intended to answer three key questions: (1) What proportion of people have experienced DMCs? (2) Who have experienced DMCs? (3) What did their DMCs look like (in terms of duration/reason for beginning etc.)? In addition, several open-ended questions were included to allow participants to elaborate on their DMC experiences, which created rich additional information.

The instrument was designed to take a snapshot reading of the DMC experiences that participants have had (or are currently experiencing) both in the context of language learning and elsewhere. The questionnaire was designed in an online format in order to easily distribute it widely and to reach as many participants as possible, for this reason it is also necessarily brief to encourage the maximum number of responses. It was designed to stand by itself (i.e. it does not require any introduction or explanation by a teacher) and to be accessible on a wide variety of computers, tablets and mobile phones. On average it takes around 10 minutes to complete.

The original questionnaire (from which the below screenshots are taken) can be found at bit.ly/motivate-2015. This questionnaire was used as the basis for one of the studies included in my PhD thesis, in which the DMC Disposition scale included in the questionnaire was demonstrated to have strong internal consistency (Cronbach’s Alpha = .84): this was formed from 10 of the 12 Likert scales on pages 4 and 5 of this document (excluding “Many times it felt like a real struggle to keep going” and “It didn’t feel like hard work at the time – I was just caught up in the flow”).

The full results of this study (and a description of issues related to the piloting and development of the questionnaire) can be found in my thesis, accessible at http://eprints.nottingham.ac.uk/33810/.

Please feel free to use the basis of this questionnaire for research purposes (however please always acknowledge the source): until the formal journal article is published, the questionnaire can be referenced as follows:

Understanding long-term motivation

Hello!

My name is Christine Muir and I am a researcher from the University of Nottingham, England. I am carrying out research into long-term motivation and would be very grateful if you could help me by answering a few questions.

It will not take more than 7-10 minutes, and your answers will be invaluable in helping me understand why and how people engage in long-term projects. I will use this information to help us learn more about how we can better support students to succeed in their studies.

Thank you so much for all your help!

Best wishes,

Christine

We find accounts on the internet of people being totally absorbed in VERY INTENSE PROJECTS which motivate them for weeks or even months at a time.

These people say things like:
- “I think about this project day and night — I feel like it’s taken over my life!”
- “I’m amazed I’ve been able to stay so focused for so long, I’m so enjoying it that putting in all the work feels easy!”
- “I never thought I could achieve so much!”
- “My friends can definitely see that something special is happening to me, they say I’ve never seen me so motivated!”
- “I wish I could experience this type of motivation while working towards all my goals!”

Please answer the following questions by marking the appropriate answer.
