

HRBP Business-Driven Methodology Workshop

From Discovery to High-Level Gap Analysis

HR Leadership Curators (HRLC) Charlotte-Area Workshops

HRBPs Need a Methodology to Add Serious Value

Being a strategic partner can be challenging. Too often, clients think of you as a commodity rather than a partner, but you can change their perception. With a strong methodology and process to guide client discussions, you can work collaboratively with clients to improve employee performance and strategically achieve business goals.

Great news! This workshop helps attendees practice using the HRBP business-driven methodology and process. Through interactions and serious practice, you can strengthen your strategic client partnerships.

“ For the first time, my HRBP asked insightful questions about my business and strategy. I find that invigorating, and I welcome more discussions. ”

Broad Aim

- Strengthen how you build client relationships
- Leverage an evidenced-based methodology and process to add value and improve how your clients' teams achieve business goals

Learning Objectives

- Position HR to strategically contribute to clients' business and performance goals
- Influence clients to become solution-neutral / performance-focused rather than solution-focused
- Conduct high-level analyses to identify gaps in your clients' business and performance goals
- Identify symptoms of business and performance gaps (to set up root-cause analyses)

About the Facilitator

As a certified performance consultant, Gary A. DePaul, PhD, CPT, has helped hundreds of HRBP professionals strengthen how they interact and add value to internal clients.
