resume: cheat sheet

- Objective:

Make it clear what kind of job you are looking for. Right on top write a summary about yourself. For example: “An interior designed with experience of working with various styles and budgets, I use empathy and communication skills to understand customer’s needs to offer customized solutions for a better living. I believe that the only way to do great work is to love what you do, and design is my number one passion. I’m looking for a job in _____.” (feel free to play with it)

- Dynamic verbs:

These are verbs that attract the recruiter. And there is the

- Results: The main part of your CV is the achievements and results you had in your work. Most bullet points in the list of your responsibilities should include some kind of result showing how you contributed to the business. It’s probably the hardest part, but a very important one. Make a list of all the important projects you ran or participated, all the numbers and KPIs you contributed to. Maybe you can show the scale of the projects or something like that
