INTERNATIONAL RELIGIOUS FREEDOM R O U N D T A B L E

OVERVIEW & PURPOSE STATEMENT

The IRF Roundtable is an informal group of individuals from non-governmental organizations who gather regularly to discuss IRF issues on a non-attribution basis. It is simply a safe space where participants gather, speak freely in sharing ideas and information, and propose joint advocacy actions to address specific IRF issues and problems. In response to various participant-led initiatives regarding the protection and promotion of freedom of religion, conscience, and belief in the U.S. and abroad, all participants have the opportunity to self-select into coalitions of the willing.

The Roundtable meets every three months in the U.S. Capitol and average attendance has grown to 60-75 participants from civil society and government, including senior staff members from the State Department, the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom, the U.S. Helsinki Commission, the Tom Lantos Human Rights Commission, the International Religious Freedom Caucus, members of Congress, and foreign embassies.

The goal of the Roundtable is to reverse the rising tide of restrictions on religious freedom that has been spreading across the world. According to the Pew Research Center's latest annual study on global restrictions on religion, 79% of the world's population lived in countries with high or very high levels of restrictions and/or hostilities in 2015 (up from 74% in 2014; and 68% in 2007).

In this direction, the purpose of the Roundtable is to advance IRF by:

1. Engaging the U.S. government to make IRF a foreign policy and national security priority so:
 - IRF is fully integrated into U.S. foreign policy and national security, including democracy promotion, public diplomacy, counterterrorism, and multilateral strategies.
 - U.S. foreign policy tools are used to advance religious freedom around the world, per the mandate established by the 1998 International Religious Freedom Act.
 - The political and cultural institutions necessary to advance religious freedom are continually supported, facilitated, and protected at home and abroad.
 - Global levels of religious intolerance, discrimination, persecution, terrorism, and instability are significantly reduced.
2. Engaging civil society leaders, other governments that protect and promote religious freedom, and multilateral, intergovernmental institutions to coordinate joint advocacy efforts.
3. Engaging in meaningful dialogues with governments that restrict religious freedom, so as to:
 - Politely but persistently push factual reports that document violations of their own constitutions and/or international commitments.
 - Frame the issues in their best interests, and increase mutual understanding and respect of religious communities and dynamics.
 - Agree on a process to resolve differences related to particular situations in their countries.
 - Create a mechanism for improvement of policies and practices, and for verification.

While participants of the Roundtable continue to engage the U.S. government to do more to advance IRF, and work with it when and where it can help, they do not rely exclusively on it to achieve the goal. Rather, participants also reach out directly to other governments. The meaningful dialogues they have opened with ambassadors, embassies, and delegations are designed to grow into results-driven collaborations. Indeed, they are manifestations of "bottom-up" civil society engaging the "top-down" of authoritarian governments, something participants want to model in the context of multiple bilateral relations. To borrow from the lingo of diplomacy, the Roundtable represents a creative intersection of "Track 1" (governmental) and "Track 2" (civil society) – its emerging model is a true demonstration of "Track 1.5" engagement in action, through which strategic partnerships, collaborations, and consultative relationships between governments and civil society organizations might advance peace and prosperity.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE
Office of International Religious Freedom
Ministerial to Advance Religious Freedom, July 24-26

Secretary Pompeo will host the Ministerial to Advance Religious Freedom in Washington, the first-ever Ministerial to advance religious freedom around the world. This event will focus on concrete outcomes that reaffirm international commitments to promote religious freedom and produce real, positive change. The Ministerial will convene a broad range of stakeholders, including foreign ministers, international organization representatives, religious leaders, and civil society representatives, to discuss challenges, identify concrete ways to combat religious persecution and discrimination, and ensure greater respect for religious freedom for all.

Expanding the Conversation: On July 24, we will equip and empower civil society organizations, including organizations working on religious freedom, to understand better how to access U.S. financial support for their efforts. Civil society, including religious organizations, are vital to protecting and promoting religious freedom. During this session, experts will explain to participants the U.S. grant making process and answer their questions. Then, senior U.S. government officials will provide an overview of foreign policy goals in relation to international religious freedom. Finally, philanthropic and private sector organizations will share best practices for civil society organizations to link their efforts to improve religious freedom with private sector initiatives and resources.

Civil Society Lessons Learned: On July 25, members of civil society groups, including religious leaders and survivors of religious persecution, will convene to tell their stories, share their expertise, and ultimately unite on a path to greater religious freedom in our societies. We have invited more than 175 civil society representatives and more than 100 religious leaders representing every corner of the world to participate. The program will include breakout sessions on the intersections between religious freedom and women's rights; religious freedom and countering violent extremism; religious freedom and economic prosperity; confronting legal challenges to religious freedom; advocating for equal rights for all; preserving cultural heritage; and providing support and care to victims of religious violence or persecution. The Secretary will host an evening reception with foreign government delegations and authorities, select civil society and religious community participants, U.S. government officials, and Members of Congress.

Role of Government: On July 26, government and international organization representatives will participate in plenary sessions focused on: (1) identifying global challenges to religious freedom, (2) developing innovative responses to persecution on the basis of religion, and (3) sharing new commitments to protect religious freedom for all. We have invited authorities from over 80 countries that have a demonstrated record for advancing religious freedom and are committed to promoting Article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, or that recently have taken meaningful steps to begin to do so. We also have invited representatives from international organizations to participate. Survivors or close relatives of those who suffered persecution due to their religious beliefs will share their stories. We ask delegations to announce at the Ministerial new actions to protect and promote freedom of religion or belief.

ARE RELIGIOUS SCRIPTURES A SOURCE OF CONFLICT OR HARMONY?

Sponsored by: Center for Pluralism

Open Invitation to Civil Society & Government

Location: Longworth House Office Building, Room 1540-A

Time: 11:30 am - 1:30 pm

Preview: The absence of freedom to see God as a creator of all humanity has become a significant source of conflict. Each religious group acts as if they own God exclusively and is not available to others. Each one believes that God has made a deal with them behind other's back, they also think that God has given exclusive brokerage to their messenger and denied others. Is that our God? God is more significant than we have made him out to be. A symposium on scriptures from Judaism, Christianity, Islam, Hinduism, and Buddhism. Can a Rabbi, Pastor, Imam, Pundit and a Bhikkhu have the religious freedom to universalize their respective scriptures?

SURVEILLANCE, SUPPRESSION, AND MASS DETENTION: XINJIANG'S HUMAN RIGHTS CRISIS

Hearing of the Congressional-Executive Commission on China

Open Invitation to Civil Society & Government

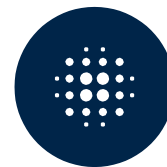

Location: 124 Dirksen Senate Office Building

Time: 10:00 am – 12:00 pm

Preview: The hearing will look at the serious and deteriorating human rights situation faced by Uyghurs; examine the Chinese government's efforts to build the world's most advanced police state in the XUAR, and explore policy options to address these issues within U.S.-China relations. Uyghurs and other primarily Muslim ethnic minorities in the Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region (XUAR) have been subjected to arbitrary detention, torture, egregious restrictions on religious practice and culture, and a digitized surveillance system so pervasive that every aspect of daily life is monitored—through facial recognition cameras, mobile phone scans, DNA collection, and an extensive and intrusive police presence.

No RSVP necessary.

IRF ROUNDTABLE WORKING LUNCH

*Co-Sponsored by: Participants of the IRF Roundtable
Open Invitation to Civil Society & Government*

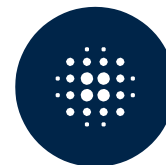

Location: 902 Hart Senate Office Building

Time: 12:00 pm – 1:30 pm

Preview: Parallel to the Ministerial working lunch for government representatives that will be held at the State Department on this date and time, we are organizing a working lunch for civil society representatives and partners on Capitol Hill. Featuring: leaders of the International Panel of Parliamentarians for Freedom of Religion or Belief. We are planning two moderated discussions, serving the dual purpose of an accurate summary and a call-to-action: 1. What did we hear and learn this week at the Ministerial and the side events around it? 2. What are we going to do now, where & when? In answering the second question, we will discuss the IRF Roundtable vision and plans to establish a global, interlocking network of multi-faith religious freedom/policy roundtables and coordinate its actions with the global network of governments (per the International Contact Group for Freedom of Religion or Belief) and the global network of legislators (per the International Panel of Parliamentarians for Freedom of Religion or Belief). We will also discuss the regions and countries that are most likely to embrace, respect and work with multi-faith roundtables.

HOW TO PROTECT INTERNATIONAL RELIGIOUS FREEDOM FROM THE POLITICIZATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Co-Sponsored by: The Heritage Foundation & Concerned Women for America

Open Invitation to Government & Civil Society

Location: The Heritage Foundation's Lehrman Auditorium

Time: 2:00 pm – 3:30 pm

Preview: Dr. Aaron Rhodes' new book "The Debasement of Human Rights: How Politics Sabotage the Ideal of Freedom" identifies a dangerous trend in the international human rights movement. Increasingly, the natural rights of individuals, like religious freedom, are being conflated with manufactured rights which are the social and economic policy priorities of particular groups and governments. Natural rights protect the fairness of the political process by ensuring that individuals are free to think, speak, and act according to their convictions, including their religious beliefs. However, when governments and social groups can transform their economic and social policy goals into "human rights," this undercuts the moral legitimacy and persuasive power of natural rights like religious freedom. The panelists will discuss how robust protection of religious freedom will ultimately lead to economic prosperity and why natural rights are best protected when they are protected for all, not for members of particular identity groups. Please join us for this discussion on the future of international religious freedom and the human rights movement.
