Dear Participants of the 2019 Ministerial to Advance Religious Freedom,

The International Religious Freedom (IRF) Roundtable is excited to welcome you to the largest IRF event in history! It is an unprecedented opportunity to meet and network with others, increase mutual understanding and respect, and develop long-term relationships that can collaboratively advance religious freedom. We hope you will engage in many ways and at many events while you are in Washington, D.C.

As an informal group of individuals from non-governmental organizations who gather regularly to discuss IRF issues, our hope is that this entire week provides encouraging and collaborative conversations centered around engaging in the pursuit of religious freedom for every human being. Whether you are participating in the formal meetings at the State Department, the live stream at the Second Stage, the 81 Side Events, or all of the above, we are grateful for your participation at this historic gathering.

The events found in this Event Program are independently produced. Each event’s features and requirements vary. Please note that some events are open to the public, some require an RSVP, and others are invitation only. This Events Program is designed to assist you in locating, learning about and choosing events you would like to attend. It features:

- A convenient Table of Contents where you can click on a title and be taken directly to that event’s full information.
- A “back-to-top” link at the bottom of every page to take you to the top of the Program.
- A map-of-the-day link on each page that makes it easy to discover where you are in relation to where the events are that you would like to attend.
- The necessary RSVP information is linked under each event in this program.
- Events marked by the Second Stage Event badge are important concurrent programing during official events, as well as overflow space with a live stream of official events on Tuesday and Wednesday.

We hope this guide to the 2019 Ministerial to Advance Religious Freedom will be help you engage in discussions, develop relationships, and work towards the advancement of peace and prosperity through the fundamental right of freedom of belief, conscience, and religion.

What is the IRF Roundtable?

The International Religious Freedom (IRF) Roundtable in Washington, D.C., is a proven platform for bringing people together—despite deep political and theological differences—and building mutual understanding, respect, trust and reliance among citizens, groups and governments. Since its first meeting in January of 2010, it has emerged as a multi-confessional, inclusive, equal citizenship and governance model.

As an outgrowth of the first-ever Ministerial to Advance Religious Freedom last year, the IRF Roundtable model is being replicated around the world. A global network of multi-faith Roundtables that intentionally interfaces across countries and continents could support societies that are more civil, states that are more stable, and thus countries that are stronger. These civil society-led Roundtables are manifestations of “bottom-up” civil society engaging the “top-down” of governments, through which strategic partnerships and consultative relationships between governments and civil society organizations might advance peace and prosperity.

The IRF Roundtable has been called by a leader of one of the new Roundtables a “technology for peace.” Participants plan to coordinate multi-faith civil society and government actions to strengthen cultures; discredit and undermine radical ideologies and violent extremism; increase stability and security; secure individual rights; and enable economic development, growth and prosperity.

The Strategic Opportunity: Since the Ministerial to Advance Religious Freedom last year, Ambassador Sam Brownback and his IRF team have been working with other governments, the IRF Roundtable and other civil society partners to build a global alliance that consists of networks of like-minded governments, parliamentarians, and civil society organizations and faith communities.

The Strategy: The goal is to get more players in this game and on the field, supercharge IRF efforts and more effectively impact public policy to advance religious freedom. The Ministerial to Advance Religious Freedom serves as the annual in-person gathering of the global alliance. In between, like-minded governments organize and host follow-on regional religious freedom conferences; and civil society and faith community leaders establish multi-faith roundtables that work among themselves and with their respective governments, holding regular meetings on all continents.

Building the IRF Roundtable Global Network: Roundtables have already been created in Nigeria, Taiwan, Sudan, South Korea, Belgium, Colombia, Ukraine, and Italy. We expect more to launch soon in the Kurdistan region of Iraq, the United Kingdom, France, Hungary, Mongolia, Indonesia, Mexico and Romania. And more are now being discussed in the Dominican Republic, Bulgaria, Uzbekistan, India, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Malaysia, Lebanon, Tunisia, Argentina, Peru, Guatemala, Brazil, and Greece.

Coordinating Global Actions: As an outgrowth of this 2019 Ministerial to Advance Religious Freedom, we will focus on coordinating actions across all three global networks of the alliance, which will become the foundation for the long-term impact we all seek.
