about medical students and other students who are exposed to him."

As part of the probation, McIntosh is not allowed to have contact with the victim nor is he permitted, Means said, to take a supervisory position where he will "have the ability to control the lives of females."

"You're walking a thin line with me," Means told the former professor, who resigned in December as director of Penn's Head Injury Center.

McIntosh met the victim, an Olympic-caliber rower who was planning to attend Penn's veterinary school, for drinks on the night of Sept. 6, 2002.

They went to the New Deck Tavern in University City, where they had three drinks each and then drank Irish whiskeys at the nearby White Dog Cafe, Smith said.

The pair went down the road to Pod, where the victim vomited while sitting at the bar. She vomited again while walking down a long hallway to the restroom, and then again inside the bathroom.

Somewhere along the way, Smith alleges that McIntosh slipped the victim a drug, sodium pentobarbital.

According to Smith, the pair left Pod and walked back to McIntosh's Hayden Hall office.

"He didn't walk her to the university hospital," Smith said.

"He walked her back to the confines of his locked office."

Inside the office, Smith said, McIntosh sexually assaulted the victim, who was "in and out of consciousness."

The victim walked down the hall to vomit in the bathroom and was sexually assaulted again upon her return, Smith said.

"I was raped and it was the most disgusting thing ever," the victim told the judge.

When he was arrested in May 2003, McIntosh was charged with rape and other crimes. He made a plea agreement to avoid trial.

Respectably and clad in a herringbone suit, blue Oxford shirt and argyle tie, McIntosh told the court yesterday, "My actions were inappropriate and I totally admit it."

He denied having drugged the victim.

"I'm deeply sorry for my conduct," he said.

The victim was referred to McIntosh by her uncle, McIntosh's roommate at Williams College. Both men graduated in 1975 and considered each other best friends.

"We now know he is a sexual predator who cannot be cured," the uncle said.

After the hearing, the father of the victim said, "This is a dangerous man ... who really needs to be taken out of society and kept a close watch on." ★

Cos discusses scandal

Implies in interview that accuser wanted $

Bill Cosby has finally broken his silence about drugging and groping allegations levied against him by a former Temple University employee.

And he did it an exclusive interview with the National Enquirer, offering a vague, sort-of apology to the 31-year-old Canadian woman.

"Looking back on it, I realize that words and actions can be misinterpreted by another person, and unless you're a supreme being, you can't predict what another individual will do," Cosby said in an interview with Enquirer Editor Barry Levine, in the March 14 issue, which hits newsstands tomorrow.

While Cosby at first said he did not want to speculate whether the woman's motive was financial gain — "I don't want to go there" — he all but went there, anyway.

"I am not going to give in to people who try to exploit me because of my celebrity status," said Cosby, 67, who did not deny that he had been the woman's mentor.

"Sometimes you try to help people and it backfires on you and then they try to take advantage of you," Cosby said. "People can soil you by taking advantage."

Although Cosby has been cleared of any criminal charges, he said he was speaking out in anticipation of a civil suit the Canadian woman is expected to file against him shortly.

Cosby also commented on Tamar Green, a 57-year-old California lawyer who said Cosby had drugged and groped her more than 30 years ago. She told her story first to the Daily News.

"My problem is with some media and how it appeared that Miss Green was allowed to be a 'wrecking ball,'" he told the Enquirer, admitting that her allegations intensified the scandal.

David Brokaw, Cosby's publicist, confirmed that Cosby's interview was legitimate.

Cosby's decision to speak to the supermarket tabloid, with which he has had a contentious relationship over the years, was unusual for a number of reasons.

Five years ago, he threatened a $250 million lawsuit against the Enquirer and demanded a retraction of a story that claimed a then-20-year-old actress had accused him of sexual misconduct. Stuart Zakim, a spokesman for the Enquirer, declined to comment on whether Cosby had filed suit or whether the tab had retracted its story.

Brokaw, Cosby's spokesman, also declined to comment on his client's history with the tabloid or why Cosby had chosen to talk exclusively to the Enquirer. During the five weeks that D.A. Castor was investigating the Cosby case, Cosby's representatives declined numerous requests for interviews from the Daily News and other news organizations.

IN THE LINE OF DUTY

Officer James M. Justice, 40, was killed March 1, 1929, when he was struck by a motor vehicle at Chew Avenue and Johnson Street after having stopped another car for a traffic violation. He had been on the force five years.

Officer William C. Henderson, 34, was shot to death March 3, 1932, in a gun battle with four men he caught robbing a drug-store at 54th Street and Woodland Avenue. He was a 12-year veteran of the force.

The Daily News commemorates the death of every Philadelphia police officer who has died in the line of duty on the anniversary of the officer's death.

man, said the tab has a circulation of about 1.5 million. He said he believes that Cosby's interview vindicates the newspaper.

"It just validates the credibility of our reporting," he said. "People make jokes about the Enquirer all the time, but this positions it as a credible source of news."

In the Enquirer interview, Cosby also defends his attorneys' digging up of negative information about Tamara Green, his second accuser, and passing it along to the media.

"I guess that a celebrity trying to protect himself is not supposed to use every ounce of protection," he said.

Tamara Green said she was amused that Cosby had referred to her in the Enquirer interview as a "wrecking ball."

"I've been called a lot of things in my life, but this is my absolute favorite," she said, laughing, yesterday. "I'm going to find a way to get it on my license plate. I swear to God." ★

Lawmakers say ban on gays is hurting war on terrorism

More than 50 House members filed a bill yesterday that would reverse the 12-year-old "don't ask, don't tell" policy, allowing gays and lesbians to serve openly in uniform. The lawmakers said the ban undermines national security, since the military is struggling to recruit soldiers.

The bill reflects an attempt by Democrats to reframe the gay-rights debate in an era where Republicans have used the controversial same-sex marriage issue as a political club.

The "don't-ask" policy went into effect in 1993, under a compromise brokered by President Bill Clinton.

A recent government study found that more than 750 service members in jobs considered crucial in combating terrorism — including linguists and intelligence specialists — were among the nearly 10,000 who have been dismissed from the armed forces for being gay, lesbian, or bisexual under the policy.

Bush keeps heat on Syria, hints compromise on Iran

President Bush increased pressure on Syria yesterday, demanding it withdraw its troops from Lebanon, while Iran and its nuclear weapons program drew fresh U.S. criticism.

Overall, the American rhetoric toward Damascus and Tehran was combative, reminiscent in some ways of the tough talk that preceded the U.S. invasion of Iraq two years ago.

Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, declaring "we cannot be relaxed about Iran," declined to rule out a U.S. attack. But, Rice said, "diplomacy has time to work," and she hinted Bush would approve economic overtures by U.S. allies to Iran.

On Syria, though, there appears to be no give in the U.S. position that it must withdraw its troops from Lebanon and allow the neighboring Arab country it has long dominated to run its own political affairs.

After Chicago slayings, U.S. judges want security

Two federal judges in Chicago called for greater security yesterday, following the slayings of a judge's husband and 89-year-old mother — apparently over a case the judge had heard.

"This horrible tragedy has got to serve as the basis for a substantial increase in security for judges and their families," U.S. District Judge Wayne R. Andersen said. "The Internet is plastered with information about every one of us, and I fear, and my family certainly fears, that these kinds of incidents are going to be repeated unless there is a very high priority on the safety of judges and their families."

Verizon gives MCI option of taking higher Qwest bid

A potential bidding war for MCI Inc. took shape yesterday as merger partner Verizon Communications Inc. freed the long-distance telephone company to discuss a higher bid from Qwest Communications Inc.

MCI set a two-week time frame for talks and a full evaluation of the revised $8 billion bid submitted last week by Qwest, the local phone company for most of the Rocky Mountains and Pacific Northwest. That offer is $1.2 billion richer than the price agreed to Feb. 14 by Verizon, which dominates the Northeast and Mid-Atlantic.

U.N. peacekeepers kill 60 gunmen in Congo

U.N. troops killed as many as 60 militiamen in a stepped-up campaign to clear northeastern Congo of rogue gunmen who have preyed on residents and are suspected in the recent slaying of nine peacekeepers, U.N. officials said yesterday.

The 240 Pakistani peacekeepers, backed by an attack helicopter and responding to fire, killed more people than in any other operation during the U.N.'s six-year mission in Congo.

The U.N. Security Council widened the Congo mission's mandate in October to counter accusations that U.N. peacekeepers have been ineffective.
