

Nurse Practitioner Creates Herbal First Aid Spray

Noreen Mulvanerty, a family nurse practitioner and herbalist, proudly announces her first product, Omyst™, a healing herbal first aid spray. This revolutionary spray has been clinically proven to aid in the treatment of minor cuts, burns, scratches, rashes, insect bites, stings and sutures.

Omyst™ is an all-natural medicinal spray made from 100 percent organically grown calendula, yarrow, plantain and wild roses in alcohol. These medicinal herbs have been scientifically researched and found to be safe and effective among people of all ages.

After completing a postgraduate degree in Chinese medicine and an apprenticeship with world-renowned herbalist and author Susun Weed, Mulvanerty was determined to create her own range of herbal products. The catalyst for a wound care spray stemmed from her observations working as a family nurse practitioner in emergency rooms for over 12 years. "I have treated and sutured thousands of cuts and burns and air is essential to rejuvenation," said Mulvanerty. "I became distressed to discover the leading topical application actually delayed wound healing causing an alarmingly high rate of infection. I believe my spray is the first of its kind as it contains all the essential healing components and is much cleaner and easier to apply than messy salves and ointments, which are often misapplied. The constituents also provide anti-itch and anti-inflammatory properties and reduce pain on contact."

Omyst™ can be purchased online at Omyst.com and HerbalIntervention.com as well as at select pharmacies and spas in the New York Metropolitan area. Natural Awakenings readers will save 20% when they order by Aug. 31. See ad, page 16.
