Réka SZŰCS: Rising Trot
statement
My experimental short films (for which I often use cine-film), are choreographic works without dialogue that deconstruct the narrative systematically. They are dance films, if you like. My intention making these mostly improvisational moving images is to find what’s called ‘wild seeing’ (Bernhard Waldenfels): although the filmed moving image in contrast to the live performance is reproductive, the film’s concept brings a pre-predicative experience (Edmund Husserl) into focus. That is to say, it doesn’t define, nor interpret anything, but the sequences of shots, the montage, and the texture of sound directly open into the current happening within the frame. They play dynamically with both Presence and Absence. Sometimes the screen is perceived as a mask or a membrane, it acts like a surface between the happening and the audience, and yet other times the screen vanishes completely.

As a result, the dynamism of receiving these moving images can be experienced as a series of immediate kinaesthetic and visceral sensations, as a kind of “absolute presence” This dynamism can also be experienced by perceiving the surface between the on-screen happening and the audience: seeing this constant slipping out of presence and synchronicity as a kind of ‘prevailing absence’. It brings about feeling connected to and disconnected from the body-mind of another, as well as feeling connected to, and disconnected from one’s own body-mind.

The body enters the house, instead of getting on the plane, which would bring it to Mexico City first, and then to Oaxaca. It could still catch the evening bus there, crossing the mountains over the night to Puerto Escondido. It would travel on a truck in the piercing light of the early morning, all the way down on Highway 175. At Puerto Angel it would squeeze into a cab with eight other passengers. They would reach for the horn of the Huatulco bay that resembles a sweet water lake. Waiting in the shades a fisherman would come and offer a ride, crossing, for a few dollars, to the other side of the lagoon.

Not every man with a boat is a fisherman, and not every fisherman is to be trusted. But that crumbling skiff is safe. It holds a native couple, old and withered, in dresses adorned with flowers, marking a celebration, ready to set off to the sea.

The lagoon is a natural reserve, and the boatman turns the engine on sparingly. The venomous green below is split with rare thrusts.

Amidst the matt white respiratory roots that crisscross the thick mangrove marsh, tiny, unknown species of heron appear. The silence of the engine gives way to their chatter.

The road is not long enough for the mind to grasp what has been penetrated. As soon as the boat hits the shore, little black children run across the hot sand to greet the passengers in a mix of native languages.
One of them nods at a question and repeats the name of the place, then turns silent, points at one direction, and runs away.

Those who follow him, arrive at mud huts under palm roofs. Progress is slow in the soft sand, stumbling through big black hens of strange shapes.

But upon passing the village, all the strangeness, along with everything else, disappears at the instant when the space opens up. The endless ocean fills the horizon. They say that sometimes in the distance, around where the loud turquoise of the salt water changes into blue with a tint of black, whales show themselves.

But the body is not going. It only dreams, once in a while, with wild horses.

Miroslav Tichy was a photographer who, from the 1960s until 1985 took thousands of surreptitious pictures of women in his hometown of Kyjow in the Czech Republic, using homemade cameras constructed of cardboard tubes, tin cans and other at-hand materials. Most of his subjects were unaware that they were being photographed.

I haven’t considered the motion of my shadow to be the evidence of the motion of the Earth. I haven’t considered my fear of darkness to be the evidence of my existence. I haven’t considered my mind demanding eternal life to be the evidence of my existence after death. I haven’t considered my disgust of future to be the evidence of my non-existence after death. I haven’t considered the easing of pain to be the evidence of time passing. I haven’t considered my passion for life to be the evidence of time not passing.

‘It was late in the evening when K. arrived. The village was J. deep in snow. The Castle hill was hidden, veiled in mist and darkness, nor was there even a glimmer of light to show that a castle was there. On the wooden bridge leading from the main road to the village K. stood for a long time gazing into the illusory emptiness above him. Then he went onto find quarters for the night. The inn was still awake, and although the landlord could not provide a room and was upset by such a late and unexpected arrival, he was willing to let K. sleep on a bag of straw in the parlour. K. accepted the offer.’

Hungary has been gripped by a controversy over anti-immigration posters.

The state-funded posters, which popped up in Budapest, featured the slogans like: “If you come to Hungary, you cannot take away Hungarians’ jobs”, “If you come to Hungary, you have to respect our culture!”, “If you come to Hungary, you have to keep our laws.”

The campaign is part of a strategy by Prime Minister Viktor Orban, in response to a rise in asylum seekers in the country. Hungary had the second-highest number of asylum requests in 2014, second only to Sweden.

You’ll find a truck.) There is a wash-basin on the loading dock filled with water, next to it a bar of soap (or some soap if it is liquid soap) and a towel. Climbing onto the dock your hands will get dirty. Standing on the platform you’ll see a 13'40” long looped moving image entitled “Clear”. The first movement shows young Black students dance in “modern European dance style" or freeze into strange poses like “living sculptures". In the second movement you'll see young Black residents of a town somewhere in South Africa in a dark bungalow that is in ruins dance to the beats of a drummer as part of a primitive ritual.

'I have had some experiences with love, or think I have, anyway, although the ones I have liked best could easily be described as “common decency.”

I treated somebody well for a little while, or maybe even for a tremendously long time, and that person treated me well in turn. Love need not have had anything to do with it.' [...]

[...] ‘Love is where you find it. I think it is foolish to go looking for it, and I think it can often be poisonous.

I wish that people who are conventionally supposed to love each other would say to each other, when they fight, “Please—a little less love, and a little more common decency.”’ contemporary dance performance, S8 mapping

while I get home from work while I put the kettle on to boil
while I feed the cats
(for the past week I had to give medicine to one as he suffers from hyperacidity, and finds it hard to swallow)
while I water the roof-garden that you built me as a token of our love but it is my white pants that get muddy from the hose as I watch the lotuses (that, I know, are lilies), as I decided they are the symbols of our renewing relationship (while they grow slowly)
while I search for an arthouse film shown late at night on TV while it gets dark while I resist to turn the lights on while I move around ever more courageously in the fading space of our shared life while I eat cheese and home grown tomatoes for dinner
I cannot forget the thought that driven by the same passion and with the same desire you penetrate her in the same position
as you penetrated me.
“don’t teach me to live without you,” asked my ex-lover once when I broke up with him and it has already been five months that I have been living without you.

“Dancers slowly emerge from the crowd, their gestures contained and evocative Ghost-like they discover coats that were theirs in another time. A nightmare in movement ensues followed by a moment of sudden calm and breath. The dance continues, playing out as an exploration of how the characters came to that nightmare moment they have shown us.”
